Preface

Ecclesiastical Latin is a house of many mansions: in it are found the Latin of Jerome's Bible and that of canon law, the Latin of the liturgy and of the scholastic philosophers, the Latin of Ambrosian hymns and papal bulls. The list may be extended. As a sure foundation for the study of any particular form of Latin used by the Church, this text concentrates on the language of the Vulgate Bible and that of such major liturgical texts as the Mass and the Exsultet. Since in the study of Biblical and liturgical Latin the student encounters every major grammatical structure, he will feel confident of his preparation to read other kinds of ecclesiastical Latin.

The chief aim of this text is to give the student—within a year of study—the ability to read ecclesiastical Latin. Although Latin is no longer the universal language of the Church, it continues to shape our thinking about theological matters in the form of vocabulary drawn from Latin texts. Further, while the vernacular has permanently come in, it is still true that anyone wishing to study Augustine or Aquinas must know Latin.

Learning ecclesiastical Latin has two bonuses for the student. Recent studies have shown that the formal analysis of a highly structured language such as Latin gives the student an improved understanding of the purposes and possibilities of language and greatly advances his ability to write and speak effectively. For the student planning to study the Greek of the New Testament, Latin introduces him to a sister-language which shares many of the same methods of expression. Thus the study of ecclesiastical Latin, while an enjoyable and profitable study in itself, looks back to the improvement of English and forward to the mastery of the original language of the Gospels.

The ecclesiastical Latin of this text is largely that of Jerome (c. 340–420) and Ambrose (340–397). Both men were masters of classical Latin (the language of Cicero and Vergil, writers of the first centure b.c.), but both were men of their own times who wrote to be understood by their contemporaries. EL and classical Latin share the same vocabulary the same forms, the same syntax. But EL has informal elements—an enduring part of Latin throughout its history—which were excluded by the literary practitioners of classical Latin. Some EL may be aggressively slangy (e.g., manducare 'to gulp down' in place of edere 'to eat'). EL, as a form of Latin later by four centuries than the classical, shows expected evolutionary change, approximating the span between Shakespeare and today. But what especially marks EL as different from classical Latin is its use as a language of translation: it borrows or assimilates constructions from koine Greek; it borrows vocabulary from koine Greek; it adapts some Latin words to meanings and connotations found in the koine Greek originals. In some instances the Greek is itself a rendering of the Hebrew. These calques and loan translations are so frequent—particularly in the Vulgate—that some critics go so far as to recognize EL as a separate dialect spoken and understood only by Christians.

Of the thirty-five units of instruction in this text, perhaps twenty may be covered in one semester and fifteen in the next; this leaves approximately three to four weeks for continuous reading of selected original texts (such as Mark's Gospel). In the exercises actual quotations from the New Testament and major liturgical texts occur modestly at first, but by the middle units about half the exercises already are direct quotations; some later units even illustrate their points of syntax and their vocabulary entirely by unadapted citations. The last fifteen units conclude with extended original passages, carefully graded to match the students' growing knowledge of grammar and supplemented only by the necessary glosses; thus, in the second semester, what begins as a partial devotion of time, after Unit 35, ends as an entire devotion to reading.

Drills are included for each unit; they are intended for use during and after each grammar presentation to engage the students immediately in the new material and so make their private study more efficient. Not all exercises need be assigned for homework; there is much for the instructor to choose from to suit the needs of the class. But student recitations of exercises must include translation, precise syntactical explanations, and frequent transformations (such as changes from singular to plural, active to passive, imperfect to per-feet, etc.). In addition, students need a quiz each period and frequent examinations to assure them of their progress.

Vocabulary lists give verbs first, then nouns, then adjectives, then all others; the conventional listing of vocabulary alphabetically has been abandoned as artificial and potentially confusing to the students. In general, the meanings given are those most often encountered in EL. With few exceptions, compound verbs are listed under the primitive (i.e., unprefixing) form; this is intended to give students a systematic grasp of compounding, and invite them to analyze any word as far as possible into its constituents.

Also appended to each unit are vocabulary notes of various kinds—on usage or of morphological interest—and English derivatives from Latin (in the interest of conserving space obvious derivations, such as innocence from innocentia, have been omitted).

Finally, students from the first are instructed to learn the correct quantities of vowels. There are three lasting benefits to be gained from this practice: students avoid the abuse of anachronism (which the use of an American form of the Italian pronunciation entails); they prepare themselves to appreciate the quantitative prosody of an Ambrosian hymn; they understand the system behind the accent-marks in Latin missals and breviaries still to be found in some libraries.

Unit 1

1. Pronunciation of Ecclesiastical Latin

The alphabet used to record ecclesiastical Latin is the same as that used for English, except for the absence of k and w.

Aa, Bb, Cc, Dd, Ee, Ff, Gg, Hh, Ii, Jj, Ll, Mm, Nn, Oo, Pp, Qq, Rr, Ss, Tt, Uu, Vv, Xx, Yy, Zz.

a. Vowels The vowels are a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes y. While English has several different ways to pronounce each vowel, Latin has only two, called long and short. In a strict sense, these terms—long and short—refer to quantity, i.e., the time taken to say them.

a, as in father: gratia, papa, a a, as in carouse: aqua, ad, ab e, as in they: cena, ecclesia, e e, as in get: terra, ex, sine, bene

i, as in machine: doctrina, familia, vita

i, as in fit: missa, in, sine, ibi

o, as in no: gloria, non, hora, pro

o, as in soft: doctrina, apostolus, dominus

u, as in tuba: natura, futurus, Judaea

u, as in put: culpa, cum, super

N.B.: For y, see note 4.

Notes: 1. Long vowels are indicated with a superscribed bar, called a macron (or, simply, a long mark). In this text long vowels will always be thus indicated.

2. Note that short e, i, o, and u differ from their long

forms in quality of sound as well as in quantity. But when ecclesiastical Latin is sung, the short vowels, when in open positions, tend to take on the same quality as the long vowels- since the English speaker's ear is not good at detecting the quantity of a vowel, this in practice goes a long way toward blurring the distinction between long and short vowels. Close short vowels, however, tend in song to retain their own quality. Compare short e in terra and in Deo when sung: terra, but 'day-oh.'

- z. There are no silent vowels in Latin: e.g., confines is two syllables in English, but three in Latin (con/fi/nes).
4. The letter y occurs only as a vowel (never as a consonant), in words borrowed from Greek. It came to be pronounced like the short form of i: mysterium, hymnus.
5. A vowel followed by another vowel, or separated from it by h, is usually short: scire, but sciat; nihil.

b. Diphthongs A diphthong is a sequence of two vowels pronounced together in one syllable. Here are the more frequently encountered diphthongs:

, like e: aeternus, saeculum an like ou- in out: aurum, laudd oe, like e: oecumenicus, coepi ui like -wi- in dwindle: huic, cui

c. Consonants The consonants are pronounced as follows:

b, as in English (but more like p before s or t).
 , like k in all positions, except before e, i, ae, or oe- then, like ch in church: cena, circa, caelum, coenobium.
d, f, as in English.
g, like g in gut in all positions (but see note ij, except before e, i or y- then, like j in jut: angelus, regina, Aegyptius.
h, as in hat (not as in honor or hour): hondres, hora.

j, this is in reality i used as a consonant, pronounced like y in yet: jam, Jesus, justus.

l, m, n, p, as in English.

r, like English r, but lightly trilled.

s, unvoiced, as in set and loose: ecclesia, missa.

t, v, x, as in English.

z, like dz in adze: baptizd.

Notes: i. The combination gn is like ny in canyon: agnus, regnum.

2. Sc followed by e or i is like sh: scelus, scivi.

z. U has the character of a consonant in qu, gu, and (often) su. Gu + a vowel is like gw: sanguis- su + a vowel, like sw: suavis.

4. X and z count as two consonants (x = ks; z = dz).

z. Ti followed by a vowel is pronounced tsi (except when preceded by s, t, or x): laetitia, pretidsus, vitium (but hostia).

6. Ph is like /-ch and th are pronounced as in character and thyme.

7. Doubled consonants are doubly pronounced: ancil/la, mis/sa, pec/catum, sab/batum, com/mit/td.

8. There are no silent consonants in Latin.

d. Syllabication A Latin word has as many syllables as it has vowels or diphthongs. Division into syllables is made after open vowels—i.e., those not followed by a consonant—(pi/us, De/us) or those followed by a single consonant (vi/ta, hd/ra). Division is made after the first consonant when two or more consonants follow a vowel—consequently called an enclosed vowel—(mis/sa, minis/ter, san/ctus). But in compounds the parts are separated (de/scribo).

Note: The sequence of a mute consonant (b, c, d, g, p, t) or f and a liquid consonant (l, r) is taken with the succeeding vowel: la/crima, pa/tris.

e. Syllabic Quantity» Accent The length of a syllable is instrumental in establishing the accent of a word of three or more syllables. A syllable is long (by nature) if it contains a long vowel or a diphthong, or long (by position) if a short vowel is followed by two or more consonants or by a double consonant, x or z; a short vowel made long by position is still pronounced short: missa, not missa.

Accent in Latin is determined by the quantity of the next to last syllable (called the penult); if the penult is long, it bears the accent: doc/tri/na, an/cil/la. If the penult is short, then the third syllable from the end (called the antepenult) gets the accent: ec/cle/si/a, an/ge/lus, im/pe/ri/um. Words of two syllables are accented on the penult: ce/na, si/ne.

- Notes:*
- i. In prose, the combination of a mute (b, c, d, g, p, t) or f and a liquid (l, r) does not make for length by position: ce/le/bro, te/ne/brae.
 2. Traditional Latin missals and breviaries do not use macrons as guides to pronunciation; instead, accent marks (') are used in words of three or more syllables: confessidne, virgine.
 - z. The sequences -nf-, -ns-, -nx-, -net-, and (often) -gn- cause a preceding vowel to lengthen: inferus, edn-seerd, conjunx, sanctus, dignus (but nUgnus).

2. Nouns: An Overview

In both English and Latin, a noun is a word which indicates a person, place, thing, act, or quality. In either language, nouns have the attributes of gender, number, case, and declension.

a. Gender The gender of an English noun is revealed by the personal pronoun used in its stead: he, she, or it. Nouns referring to males have masculine gender; to females, feminine gender; to inanimate objects, nearly always neuter (- 'neither') gender. But the gender of a Latin noun is less closely tied to sex; while nouns denoting males are masculine and those denoting females are feminine, other Latin nouns denoting places, things, acts, or qualities may have any gender. Since the gender of such nouns cannot be guessed, it must be carefully memorized. In English, psalm, water, and heaven are neuter nouns (each may be referred to as 'it'); but in Latin they are masculine (psalmus 'psalm'), feminine (aqua 'water'), and neuter (caelum 'heaven'). These Latin nouns are proof of purely grammatical gender; any pronominal reference to them would have to use the appropriate grammatical gender.

b. Number Nouns may be singular or plural in their number. Both English and Latin alter the spelling of a noun to change its number: boy—singular, boys—plural; puer—singular, pueri—plural.

c. Case The grammatical task performed by a noun in a sentence is called its case. In English today, there are three cases: a noun used as the subject of a sentence is said to be in the nominative case; a noun used to indicate possession alters its spelling to make the possessive case; a noun receiving the action or following a preposition is in the objective case. These cases may occur in the singular or in the plural.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nominative	boy	boys
Possessive	boy's	boys'
Objective	boy	boys

Knowledge of these six noun forms—called the declension of a noun—is indispensable for correct English. In Latin, too, knowledge of the case system is all important for correct Latin.

d. The Latin Case System Anglo-Saxon, the earliest form of English, had five cases; today English makes do with only three cases because of its very great dependence on prepositions and on word order. Latin, conversely, has less dependence on such features because of its fuller case system. Of the eight original cases in Proto-Indo-European, Latin has retained seven of them, five major cases (nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, and ablative) and two minor ones (vocative and locative); the functions of the one missing case (the instrumental) are absorbed into the ablative case.

i. Nominative Case As in English, the nominative case in Latin is used to express the subject of a sentence. Further, any noun used to agree with the subject, whether by predication or apposition, is put into the nominative case. In the sentence, 'John went for a walk/' John is in the nominative case because it is the subject of the sentence. In the sentence, 'The winner is Kathleen,' Kathleen is in the nominative case because it predicates something of the subject; this use is called the predicate nominative. In the sentence, 'My brother James is coming to dinner,' James is in the nominative case because it directly explains the subject; James is said to be in apposition to brother.

2. Genitive Case A word used to limit or qualify the meaning of another word (in any case) is put into the genitive case. This delimitation may embrace several ideas, such as association or connection, composition, contents, subjective or objective relationship, origin, possession, authorship, description or characterization, and total or group. Such ideas are all conveyed in English by the preposition of, a man of the cloth; feet of clay; cup of water; the redemption of Jesus, the worship of God; man of La Mancha; the home of the brave; the Gospel of Mark; men of good will; half of the proceeds; five members of the team.

3. Dative Case The dative case is used to express reference, benefit or detriment, possession, and the indirect object. These ideas are expressed in English by the prepositions for or to, or by the word order: who did this for you? who did this to you? who gave you this? (— who gave this to you?) to whom does this belong?

4. Accusative Case The case of the direct object, that which receives the action, is the accusative case: I saw that movie. He broke his leg. Bill has no money. Certain prepositions require the accusative case

5. Ablative Case The ablative case is used to express separation, motion away from, manner, location, agency, and instrumentality. It occurs by itself or with a preposition which reinforces one of the basic meanings of the case. The English prepositions used most frequently to translate the ablative case are from, with, in, and by: from slavery, from the city, with ease, in town, by the student, by the sword.

6. Two Minor Cases (Vocative and Locative) The case of direct address is the vocative. Although there are some exclusively vocative forms, the nominative case is used to express most instances of direct address. The locative case survives in certain restricted uses- it has largely been absorbed by the ablative case.

e. Declension of Nouns To perform the various syntactical functions attended to by the case system, a noun must have two components, a base (to indicate the fundamental meaning) and an ending (to indicate the syntactical function). Any noun, therefore, will have one base, but several endings. The listing of the various resultant spellings of a noun—differing as the case differs, for both the singular and the plural—is called its declension- thus a noun is said to be declined. It is standard practice to list the five major cases in two columns (one for each number) in this order: nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, ablative.

There are five declensions in Latin. Each declension has its own set of endings to express the various cases. Thus the spelling of the ending for a case will vary from declension to declension, but the meaning for a case will remain constant. (In English, for example, the endings -s' and -ten's are quite different in spelling, but are identical in function- both indicate the possessive plural: boys' bikes, children's toys.) The vocabulary lists will provide three data for each noun: its nominative singular form, its genitive singular form, and its gender. These data are indispensable for the proper use of a noun.

3. First Declension Nouns

Nouns of the first declension have -ae as the genitive singular ending. To decline a first declension noun, first isolate the base by removing the ending from the genitive singular form- then to the base add the following endings:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nominative	-a	-ae
Genitive	-ae	-arum
Dative	-ae	-is
Accusative	-am	-as
Ablative	-a	-is

- Notes:*
- i. Since these endings cannot be guessed, the student must commit them firmly to memory.
 2. Macrons are part of the spelling of these endings- be sure to maintain the distinction between the nominative singular (-a) and the ablative singular (-a).
 - z. Context will help to distinguish between case endings which are identical in spelling.

vita, vitae, f. 'life'; base: vit-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nominative	vita ('life')	vitae ('lives')
Genitive	vitae ('of life')	vitarum ('of lives')
Dative	vitae ('for/to life')	vitis ('for/to lives')
Accusative	vitam ('life')	vitae ('lives')
Ablative	vita ('from/with/in/by life')	vitis ('from/with/in/by lives')

- Notes:*
- i. This is the paradigm for all first declension nouns; use it as a model when generating any form for any first declension noun. Observe how the base (vit-) recurs in each form, while the case endings keep changing. Learn to associate each form with the meaning indicated in the parentheses; this is crucial for the mastery of the case system.
 2. Since Latin does not have articles, these forms may be translated with or without an article—'life, a life, the life'—as context demands. Latin is quite different from English in this respect: 'the' is far and away the most frequently used word in English prose.
 - z. Vita is a feminine noun. The great majority of first declension nouns are feminine.

4. Prepositions: An Overview

A distinctive feature of ecclesiastical Latin is its more extensive use of prepositions than that exhibited by its predecessor, classical Latin. For example, while ecclesiastical Latin still uses the dative case for the indirect object, it may also use an equivalent prepositional phrase.

Prepositions in Latin are always used in phrases, consisting of a preposition and a substantive (i.e., a noun, a pronoun, or an adjective used as a noun). Substantives used with prepositions are said to be governed by them; prepositions govern only two cases, the accusative or the ablative. Some prepositions may govern either case, depending on the specific use.

a. Governing the Accusative Case Prepositions governing the accusative case often involve motion toward or the idea of object. For example, ad (preposition + accusative) means 'to, toward; for (the purpose of).' It may also mean 'at,' as in 'look at him.' By extension, it may mean 'at,' as in 'at the right hand of the Father.'

b. Governing the Ablative Case Prepositions governing the ablative case help to indicate clearly the specific use of the ablative intended by the speaker. Without a preposition (and aside from context), the ablative may mean several different things; but with a preposition, the ablative has only one of its potential uses activated. The translation of the preposition with an ablative always overrides the abstract translation of this case.

c. Ablative of Accompaniment The prepositions cum 'with' and sine 'without' govern the ablative case of (most often) a personal noun. For example, familia, familiae, f. 'family': cum familia 'with (the/a) family',- sine familia 'without (the/a) family.' Such a use is termed the ablative of accompaniment. Since these prepositions mean 'with' and 'without' in the sense 'in the company of' and 'not in the company of,' it is clear that they will most frequently govern substantives referring to persons. (By analogy, however, the ablative of accompaniment is sometimes extended to apply to inanimate objects.)

Vocabulary Notes

Doctrina 'teaching, doctrine' is a noun derived from the verb doceo 'teach' (Unit 19).

Ecclesia 'church; assembly' has been borrowed from the Greek; it may be used of either the people or the building.

Gloria 'glory' may carry with it the attendant ideas of praise, honor, thanksgiving, splendor, or magnificence.

The preposition a 'from, away from' has three forms: a, ab, abs; a is used before consonants, ab before vowels (or h), abs only before t (if at all).

Distinguish between 'to,' a translation of the dative case which indicates relationship, and 'to,' the translation of the preposition ad, indicating motion toward.

The prepositions cum 'with' and sine 'without,' used in the ablative of accompaniment, may also be used more loosely with other, non-personal, nouns: e.g., sine aqua 'without water.'

The preposition e has two forms: e or ex. E is used only before consonants; ex may be used before either vowels or consonants (especially p).

Note that, depending on its use, et may be either a conjunction ('and'), connecting words, clauses, and sentences, or an adverb ('even, too'), emphasizing the word it precedes.

The enclitic -que 'and' is attached to the second of two terms to be linked: aqua cenaque 'water and supper.' Its addition may cause a shift in the accent of a word: e.g., terram, but terramque; vita, but vit4que.

5. Second Declension Masculine Nouns

All nouns of the second declension have -i as the genitive singular ending. Masculine nouns of this declension are of two types, those with a nominative ending (-us) and those without a nominative ending; this latter type has a nominative identical with its base (or slightly respelled, ending in -er).

To decline a masculine noun of the second declension, determine the base by removing the ending from the genitive singular; then add the following endings:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nominative	-us (—)	-i
Genitive	-i	-orum
Dative	-e	-is
Accusative	-um	-os
Ablative	-o	-is

- Notes:*
1. Since all nouns are listed with the nominative singular form as well as the genitive singular, there is never any doubt whether the nominative singular ending is to be used or not.
 2. Although some endings are identically spelled, context will help to distinguish between them.

servus, servi, m. 'servant, slave'; base: serv-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	servus ('the servant')	servi ('servants')
Gen.	servi ('of the servant')	servorum ('of servants')
Oat.	servo ('for/to the servant')	servis ('for/to servant')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Acc.	servum ('the servant')	servos ('servants')
Ahl.	servo ('from/with/in/by the servant')	servis ('from/with/in/by the servants')

puer, pueri, m. 'boy, child'; base: puer

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	puer ('the boy')	pueri ('the boys')
Gen.	pueri ('of the boy')	puerdrum ('of the boys')
Oat.	puerd ('for/to the boy')	pueris ('for/to the boys')
Acc.	puerum ('the boy')	puerds ('the boys')
Ahl.	puerd ('from/with/in/by the boy')	pueris ('from/with/in/by the boys')

- Notes:*
1. An article [a, an, the] may be supplied as needed by the context.
 2. Servus and puer are masculine nouns. All second declension nouns in -er or -ir are masculine; the great majority of those in -us are masculine..

6. Present Tense of the Copulative Verb sum 'to be'

The singular and plural forms in the first, second, and third persons for the present tense of sum, esse, fui, futurum 'to be, exist' are as follows:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1st person:	sum ('I am')	sumus ('we are')
2nd person:	es ('you are')	estis ('you are')
3rd person:	est ('he/she/it is')	sunt ('they are')

- Notes:*
1. A Latin verb form contains both the equivalent of a pronoun ('I, you, he,' etc.) and the basic meaning. Thus Latin does in one word what English does in two: sum is a complete statement, am is not.
 2. While sum may simply indicate existence (est 'he exists'! it is chiefly used to link a subject to a predi-

- cate nominative or adjective: e.g., Michael is the captain.
- z. An overview of the verb will be presented in Section 20.

7. Kinds of Sentences

In Latin, as in English, all discourse takes the form of three kinds of independent clauses, or sentences: statements, questions, and commands (or requests). Further, each of these independent clauses has an indirect, or dependent, form. Thus there are direct and indirect statements, direct and indirect questions, and direct and indirect commands (or requests).

Direct statement: I visited my brother.

Indirect statement: He said that he had visited his brother.

Direct question: Why is the sky blue?

Indirect question: The child asked why the sky is blue.

Direct command (or request): Get your feet off the sofa!

Indirect command (or request): His mother told him to get his feet off the sofa.

N.B.: The so-called exclamatory sentence is a special form of the direct statement.

In Latin, as in English, there are seven basic sentence-patterns, each capable of taking the form of a statement, a question, or a command (or request). From these basic patterns the more complicated ones (such as compound and complex sentences) are made:

- | | | | |
|----|-----------|-------------------|--------------|
| 1. | (Subject) | Intransitive Verb | |
| | (-) | a) Sum. | |
| | (I) | am. | |
| | | b) Video. | |
| | (I) | see. | |
| 2. | (Subject) | Intransitive Verb | Adverb |
| | | a) Sum | ibi. |
| | | am | here. |
| | (-) | b) Video | bene. |
| | ill | see | well. |

z.	(Subject) (-) ID	Transitive Verb Video see	Direct Object Petrum. Peter.
4-	(Subject) (-) (I)	Transitive Verb Do give	Indirect Obj. Petro Peter	Direct Object librum. the book.
5-	(Subject) (-) (I)	Transitive Verb Facio make	Direct Object Petrum Peter	Predicate Acc. papam/ salvum. pope/safe.
6.	(Subject) (-) (I)	Copulative Verb Sum am	Pred. Nom. or Adj. Petrus/bonus. Peter/good.
7-	(Subject) (-) (I)	Passive Verb Laudor am praised	by + Agent a Petro. by Peter.

Note that Latin need not have an expressed subject, since the person and number of the subject are always indicated by the ending of the verb.

8. Direct Statements

A direct statement is a sentence which expresses a fact or makes an assertion. In Latin it makes complete sense by itself if it contains a finite verb (usually in the indicative mood; see Section 2od).

The forms of sum presented in Section 6 are finite forms in the indicative mood.

Sum.

'I am.' 'I exist.'

Papa est.

'A pope is.' 'There is a pope.' 'He is the pope.'

Papa est minister.

'The pope is a servant.'

[minister, ministr!, m. 'servant, minister']

Note the three translations of the second example. 'A pope is' is a literal translation, but it is not idiomatic English. 'There is a pope' entails the use of the expletive 'there'; this is the English idiom for expressing a nominative subject and a finite form of the verb 'to be.' The third translation, 'He is a pope,' construes papa as the predicate nominative. Either of these last two translations may be correct, depending on the context.

9. Agreement of Subject and Verb

As in English, verbs agree in number with their subjects (whether expressed or not).

Deus est.

'There is a God.' 'God exists.'

[Deus, Dei, m. 'God']

Note: Deus is a nominative singular; est is a third person singular.

Pueri sunt servi.

'The boys are servants.'

Note: Pueri is a nominative plural; sunt is a third person plural.

Puer est servus.

'The boy is a servant.'

Note: Puer is a nominative singular; est is a third person singular. It would be as incorrect in Latin to say pueri est as it would be in English to say 'the boys is.'

10. Genitive of Possession

The genitive case may be used to indicate the one who owns, possesses, or belongs to someone or something. These three related ideas may be thus illustrated: Amy's book was left in Amy's locker in Amy's school. Amy owns the book; she possesses the locker; she belongs to the school. The genitive of possession, as this use is called, may be translated with of or with the ending of the English possessive case (-'s, -s').

Papa est minister Christi.

'The pope is the minister of Christ.'

'The pope is Christ's minister.'

[Christus, Christi, m. 'Anointed One, Messiah, Christ']

Vocabulary Notes

Sum, esse, fui, futurus 'be, exist' is somewhat irregular, as the verb 'to be' is in most Indo-European languages. The present, the imperfect, and the future tenses cannot be reduced to rule: they must be observed and memorized. The fourth principal part is the future participle; since sum does not have a regular fourth principal part (i.e., a perfect passive participle) it is customary to give in its stead the future (active) participle—futurus—which cannot be guessed. When used without predication, sum means 'exist'; with some form of predication it means 'be,' and is called a copulative verb because it links subject to predicate in the nominative case.

Judaea is a noun formed from an adjective, originally modifying the noun terra: Judaea terra 'the Judean/Jewish land.'

Justitia is an abstract noun made from the adjective Justus (Unit 5).

Maria is the Latin from the Hebrew Miriam. Originally the -i- of Maria was short, but in ecclesiastical Latin it came to be pronounced long.

The base of ager, agri is revealed by the genitive case: agr-; the nominative is the base alone, but lengthened for convenience of pronunciation: ager; the plural also means 'country(side).'

Angelus, archangelus, apostolus, Christus, episcopus, and psalmus have been borrowed from Greek, the original language of the Church. Christus literally means 'the anointed one,' referring to the practice of using precious oils to anoint a king. Apostolus in the Greek means 'the one sent out.'

Discipulus is an agent noun derived from the verb disco 'learn' (Unit 35). Thus a discipulus is a 'student.'

The name Petrus is derived from the Greek for 'rock.'

Hodie literally means 'on this day,' hence 'today.'

Nam 'for' introduces an independent clause, explaining a prior statement; it always stands first in its clause.

The negative adverb non 'not' immediately precedes the word it negates.

Unit 3

11. Second Declension Neuter Nouns

Neuter nouns of the second declension have a nominative and accusative singular in -um, and a nominative and accusative plural in -a. To decline a second declension neuter noun, derive the base by removing the -I ending from the genitive singular form; then add the following endings:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nominative	-um	-a
Genitive	-I	-drum
Dative	-0	-is
Accusative	-um	-a
Ablative	-0	-is

- Notes:
- i. Except for the nominative and accusative endings, these neuter noun endings are identical with those used for masculine nouns of the second declension.
 - 2. Neuter nouns of whatever declension will duplicate the nominative form, singular or plural, in the accusative.
 - z. Neuter nouns of whatever declension will end in -a in the nominative and accusative plural forms.

verbum, verbi, n. 'word'; base: verb-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	verbum ('the word')	verba ('the words')
Gen.	verbi ('of the word')	verbdrum ('of the words')
Oat.	verbo ('for/to the word')	verbis ('for/to the words')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Acc.	verbum ('the word')	verba ('the words')
Abl.	verbo ('from/with/in/by the word')	verbis ('from/with/in/by the words')

12. Imperfect Tense of sum (to be)[‡]

The imperfect is a past continuous tense. The imperfect tense of sum, esse, fui, futurus 'to be, exist' is as follows:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1st person:	eram ('I was')	eramus ('we were')
2nd person:	eras ('you were')	eratis ('you were')
3rd person:	erat ('he/she/it was')	erant ('they were')

- Notes:* 1. The imperfect of sum is compounded of the base era- + the personal endings -m, -s, -t; -mus, -tis, -nt. The -a- of the base shortens before -m, -t, -nt.
2. Literally translated, these forms mean 'I was being, you were being,' etc. English idiom prefers simply 'I was, you were,' etc.

13. Future Tense of sum (to be)[‡]

The future tense of sum, esse, fui, futurus 'to be, exist' is as follows:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1st person:	erō ('I will be')	erimus ('we will be')
2nd person:	eris ('you will be')	eritis ('you will be')
3rd person:	erit ('he/she/it will be')	erunt ('they will be')

- Notes:* 1. The future of sum is compounded of the base eri- + the personal endings -o, -s, -t; -mus, -tis, -nt. The -i- of the base is absorbed by the ending -o in the first person singular (erō) and is replaced in the third person plural by -u- (erunt).

Notes continued:

2. Formerly, a distinction was made between 'shall' in the first person and 'will' in the second and third persons. Since this distinction has largely died out in American English, even in the most formal contexts, this text translates all future forms with the auxiliary 'will.'

14. Dative of the Possessor

The dative of the possessor is used to make a statement concerning ownership or possession. In this construction, the thing possessed is in the nominative case, the possessor in the dative case, and the verb used is sum 'to be.'

Liber est puero.

['A book is to the boy.']

'The boy has a book.'

[liber, libri, m. 'book']

Agri erant Petro.

['The fields were to Peter.']

'Peter owned the fields.'

Note: The very point of these sample sentences is the dative of the possessor. In contrast, the genitive of possession, where it occurs, almost always is no more than an ancillary idea in the sentence.

Vocabulary Notes

Chorus, hymnus, Evangelium, and mysterium are derived from the Greek. The ch- of chorus is pronounced like k- or kh-.

Caelum in the singular is a neuter noun; in the plural, it is a masculine noun. The singular and the plural are used interchangeably, with no difference in meaning: angelus caeli/caeldrum 'angel of heaven.'

Festum may be used in either number, with no difference in meaning: hodie est festum/sunt festa 'today is the feast.'

Gaudium means 'joy' as an inner feeling rather than as an outward expression.

Sabbatum 'Sabbath' is derived from Hebrew; the singular or the plural is used indifferently: hodie est sabbatum/sunt sabbata 'today is the Sabbath.'

The prepositional phrase in saecula saeculorum 'forever and ever' is used with adverbial force. The use of the genitive of a word to limit another case of itself is a Hebraic idiom which intensifies the meaning.

Unit 4

15. Adjectives: An Overview

As in English, an adjective in Latin is used to qualify or limit a noun or noun equivalent. An adjective may constitute an integral part of the structure of its sentence: 1) as a predicate adjective (the man is old) 2) as a predicate accusative (you make me happy). See Section 7.5–6. But more frequently an adjective is used attributively; i.e., it adds an ancillary idea by directly modifying a noun, and consequently does not affect the basic structure of its sentence: the old man visited his son. In addition, any adjective may be used as a substantive: the young learn from the old.

Adjectives in Latin are inflected: they change their endings to reflect precisely the gender, the number, and the case of the words which they modify. There are two types of adjectives: those which use the endings of the first and second declensions, and those which use the endings of the third declension.

16. First/Second Declension Adjectives

Adjectives of the first and second declensions draw their masculine endings from the second declension, their feminine endings from the first declension, and their neuter endings from the second declension.

	SINGULAR			PLURAL
	Masc.	Fem.	Neuter	Masc.	Fem.	Neuter
Nom.	-us (—)	-a	-um	-i	-ae	-a
Gen.	-i	-ae	-i	-orum	-arum	-orum
Dat.	-o	-ae	-o	-is	-is	-is
Ace.	-um	-am	-um	-os	-as	-a
Abl.	-o	-a	-o	-is	-is	-is

First/second declension adjectives are listed in the vocabularies by their nominative singular forms: bonus, -a, -um; sacer, sacra, sa- crum. This manner of listing makes three things clear: the adjective type [first/second declension], the form of the nominative masculine singular [with or without -us], and the spelling of the base [bonus > bon-; sacra (fem.) > sacr-].

bonus, -a, -um 'good'; base: bon-

SINGULAR

	Masc.	Fem.	Neuter
Nom.	bonus	bona	bonum
Gen.	bon!	bonae	bon!
Oat.	bond	bonae	bond
Ace.	bonum	bonam	bonum
Abl.	bond	bona	bond

PLURAL

	Masc.	Fem.	Neuter
Nom.	bon!	bonae	bona
Gen.	bondrum	bonarum	bondrum
Oat.	bonis	bonis	bonis
Ace.	bonds	bonas	bona
Abl.	bonis	bonis	bonis

The declension of the adjective sacer, sacra, sacrum 'holy, sacred' is exactly like that of bonus, -a, -um, except for the fact that it does not use the ending -us in the masculine nominative singular. Adjectives of this kind show their base clearly in the feminine nominative singular.

sacer	sacra	sacrum
sacr!	sacrae	sacr!

17. Agreement of Adjective and Noun

Adjectives agree exactly in gender, number, and case with the nouns (or noun equivalents) which they modify. For example, an adjective which modifies an accusative masculine singular noun must have an accusative masculine singular ending: bonum papany apostolum bonum. Note that agreement does not mean mere duplication of the ending of the noun: bonum papam is correct because the adjective ending fulfills the three requirements for agreement; likewise, apostolum bonum. The similarity of the endings in this latter phrase is an accidental feature of agreement, not an essential one. Note, too, that these two phrases illustrate the fact that a Latin adjective may either precede or follow its noun (with no difference in meaning).

Petrus erat bonus.

'Peter was good.'

Petrus erat bonus papa (papa bonus).

'Peter was a good pope.'

- Notes:*
1. In the first example, bonus is a predicate adjective, agreeing in gender, number, and case with the subject of the sentence (Petrus).
 2. In the second example, the noun papa is a predicate nominative, agreeing in case with the subject of the sentence (Petrus); the adjective bonus is an attributive, agreeing in gender, number, and case with papa.

18. Nominal Sentences

In a short sentence the present tense of sum 'to be' may be omitted, if there is an expressed subject. Such a sentence lacking a verb is called a nominal sentence.

Apostoli ministri Christi.

'The apostles [are] the ministers of Christ.'

Verba Domini bona.

'The words of the Lord [are] good.'

19. How to Answer Syntax Questions (1)

The mastery of Latin is made easier by the careful analysis of the grammatical structure, or syntax, of sentences. Though all aspects of grammar are important, the student is advised to concentrate in particular on two tasks: the identification of the case of any given noun or adjective in a sentence, and the determination of the reason for the case.

Verba Domini bona.

verba: case? nominative- reason? subject of the sentence.

Domini: case? genitive- reason? genitive of possession.

bona: case? nominative- reason? predicate adjective, agreeing with the subject of the sentence.

Vocabulary Notes

Cenaculum is related to cena (Unit i); the 'upstairs room' is where 'dinner' was eaten.

Note that the prepositional phrase in aeternum idiomatically means 'forever.'

Mens 'my' is translated 'mine' when used substantively ('Mine is not here.') or predicatively ('This is mine.'). Similar observations apply to noster and tuus: 'our > ours- your > yours.'

In general, multus means 'much' in the singular and 'many' in the plural; sometimes, in the singular, 'many a' is the more appropriate translation: multus vir 'many a man.'

Note that impius is the negative form of pious. It has the prefix in- 'not' assimilated to im- before p-.

Sacer 'holy, sacred' is the adjective from which the noun sacramentum has been formed.

Sabadth, taken from the Hebrew, is an indeclinable noun, i.e., its form does not change. Since its use is extremely limited in ecclesiastical Latin, its meaning is usually quite clear: e.g., in the phrase Deus Sabadth it is used as a genitive ('God of hosts').

Unit5

20. Verbs: An Overview

In both Latin and English, a verb signals existence, or action, or occurrence in time. A typical verb-form has five characteristics: person, number, tense, mood, and voice.

I see	we see
you see	you see
he/she/it sees	they see

a. Person A verb-form may have one of three persons: the first person, that of the speakers) (I see; we see), the second person, that of the one(s) spoken to (you see; you [pl.] see), or the third person, that of the one(s) spoken about (he/she/it sees; they see).

b. Number A verb-form may have one of two numbers, the singular (I see; you see; he/she/it sees) or the plural (we see; you [pl.] see; they see).

c. Tense: Time and Aspect A verb-form places its action in time, whether in the past, the present, or the future. It also places its action in relation to the passage of time; this is called its aspect.

The several tenses of English and Latin indicate both time and aspect. In English there are three tenses: present, past, future. Each tense has three aspects: simple, progressive, completed.

			ASPECT
			SIMPLE	PROGRESSIVE	COMPLETED
TIME	present	:	I see	I am seeing	I have seen past	:	I saw	I was seeing	I had seen future	:	I will see	I will be seeing	I will have seen

- Notes:*
- i. In English the present completed, past completed, and future completed tenses are also called the present perfect, past perfect, and future perfect.
 2. In addition, English has three extended completed tense-forms, for which Latin has no equivalent: I have been seeing, I had been seeing, I will have been seeing.

In Latin, these nine categories are filled by only six tense-forms (each called a 'tense'): present, imperfect, future, perfect, pluperfect, future-perfect.

		ASPECT
		SIMPLE	PROGRESSIVE	COMPLETED
TIME	present :	video 'I see' [present]	video T am seeing' [present]	vid! I have seen' [perfect] past :	vid! T saw' [perfect]	videbam 'I was seeing' [imperfect]	videram 'I had seen' [pluperfect] future :	videbo 'I will see' [future]	videbo T will be seeing' [future]	videro 'I will have seen' [future-perfect]

Thus three Latin tenses each do the work of two categories:

- present tense – present simple and present progressive
- perfect tense – present completed and past simple
- future tense – future simple and future progressive and three Latin tenses each do the work of one category:

- imperfect tense = past progressive
- pluperfect tense – past completed
- future-perfect tense – future completed

- Notes:*
- i. The perfect, pluperfect, and the future-perfect are accurately named, since perfectum in Latin means

- 'completed' (pluperfect is from plus quam perfectum 'more than completed'; hence, 'past completed').
2. The imperfect is likewise aptly named, since imperfectum means 'not completed'; hence, '(past) progressive.' The progressive aspect also includes repeated or habitual action: I used to see, I kept on seeing.
 3. Present and future tenses (present, future, perfect completed, future-perfect) are called primary tenses; past tenses (imperfect, perfect simple, pluperfect) are called secondary tenses.

d. Mood English and Latin have three moods (or attitudes of expression): indicative, subjunctive, and imperative. A verb-form in the indicative mood expresses a fact: it rained yesterday. A verb-form in the subjunctive mood expresses contingency or hypothetical action: if only he were here-, God bless you-, we asked that he leave. A verb-form in the imperative mood gives a direct command (or request): pray for us! have mercy on us!

e. Voice Verb-forms in English and Latin may have one of two voices, the active or the passive. In the active voice, the action of the verb passes from the subject: I yawned; he ran-, he ran his father's business. In the passive voice, the action of the verb passes to the subject: the child was rocked to sleep-, the safe was broken open by the thieves. Only transitive verbs, those taking a direct object in the accusative case, may have passive forms as well as active.

f. Principal Parts Verbs in English and Latin have basic forms which must be known first if all the possible forms are to be generated correctly. These are called principal parts. In English, each verb has five principal parts: see, saw, seen, seeing, sees.

see – present infinitive active saw = past-simple active seen = past participle

seeing – present participle sees – third-person singular, present indicative active

In Latin, each verb has four principal parts: video, videre, vidi!, visus.

video – first-person singular, present indicative active 'I see;
I am seeing'

videre = present infinitive active 'to see' vidi! – first-person singular, perfect indicative active 'I saw;

I have seen'

visus – perfect passive participle 'having been seen'

Note: It is assumed that the student already knows the principal parts of English verbs; therefore, Latin verbs have all their principal parts listed in the vocabularies, but are defined by the first only of the five English principal parts: video, videre, vidi, visus 'see.'

1. Finite Forms Most verb-forms are capable of being used as the predicate of a sentence. They are called finite forms because they are limited by having a specific person, number, tense, mood, and voice (participles and infinitives, for example, are not finite forms). The first and third principal parts of video, videre, vidi, visus 'see' are finite forms (video: first-person singular, present indicative active; vidi: first-person singular, perfect indicative active), whereas the second and fourth are not (videre: present infinitive active; visus: perfect passive participle).

2. Infinitives Infinitives may be seen as nouns formed from verbs to convey the action of their verbs: to be, to run, to see. These verbal nouns have tense and voice, but are not limited by having person, number, or mood. English has a present and a past infinitive (to see, to be seen; to have seen, to have been seen), but no future infinitive. Latin has a present, a perfect, and a future infinitive. The second principal part of video, videre, vidi, visus 'see' is an infinitive (videre: present infinitive active).

3. Participles Participles are adjectives formed from verbs to convey the action of their verbs: running water, a newly elected president. While English has only two participles, the present and the past, Latin has four: present active, perfect passive, future active, future passive. English does not have the equivalent of the future participles. The fourth principal part of video, videre, vidi, visus 'see' is a participle (visus: perfect passive participle).

4. Gerunds and Gerundives Both English and Latin have gerunds; these are nouns formed from verbs to convey the action of their verbs. English uses the present participle as a gerund: skiing is fun; I hate washing dishes. English does not have a gerundive; in Latin, it is identical with the future passive participle. By using auxiliaries, English may make an approximation: having to be seen.

g. The Four Conjugations To conjugate a verb is to generate its various possible forms. Verbs in Latin are classified according to their differing sets of conjugated forms. There are four conjugations in Latin, each immediately identifiable from the vowel in the penult of the second principal part (the present infinitive active). These are as follows:

- first conjugation: -a- (laudare)
- second conjugation: -e- (monere)
- third conjugation: -e- (ducere)
- fourth conjugation: -I- (audire)

- Notes:*
1. Thus video, videre, vidi, visus 'see' is a second conjugation verb.
 2. Since the methods used to generate verb-forms are determined by a verb's conjugational classification, the student is advised to note clearly to which conjugation a verb belongs.
 3. English does not have a system of conjugations. Its closest approximation is the division of verbs into weak and strong (a weak verb adds -ed to the present to form the past and the participle: talk, talked,

"That is, one always! n -ms', the other loften) in -d, -n, or -t. The terms present and past are unsatisfactory, since the 'present' participle is used for the past progressive ('I was seeing') and the 'past' participle for the present passive tense ('I am st.-i?'" Some grammarians prefer the neutral terms first and second.

Notes continued:

talked: a strong verb alters the spelling of the present to form the past and the participle: see, saw, seen-, swim, swam, swum}.

21. The Present-Stem System: Three Tenses

In all four conjugations, the stem of the present infinitive (the second principal part) is the source of three tenses: the present, the imperfect, and the future. The present tense is formed from the present stem + the personal endings; the imperfect and the future tenses are formed from the present stem + a tense-making suffix + the personal endings.

22. Present Indicative Active: First Conjugation

To form the present indicative active of a first conjugation verb, from the present infinitive (the second principal part) remove the ending -re; then to this—the present stem—add the active personal endings: -6, -8, -t; -mus, -tis, -nt. These endings each signal three things at once: the person, the number, and the voice.

laudo, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'

present infinitive: laudare

present stem: lauda-

active personal endings: -6, -s, -t; -mus, -tis, -nt

first-person singular: lauda- + -o = laudo

second-person singular: lauda- + -s = laudas

third-person singular: lauda- + -t = laudat

first-person plural: lauda- + -mus = laudamus

second-person plural: lauda- + -tis = laudatis

third-person plural: lauda- + -nt = laudent

The paradigm for these forms is as follows:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudo ('I praise')	laudamus ('we praise')
2	laudas ('you praise')	laudatis ('you praise')
3	laudat ('he/she/it praises')	laudent ('they praise')

- Notes:*
- i. The -a- of the stem is always dropped before the -o ending of the first-person singular.
 2. The endings -t and -nt always cause the -a- of the stem to shorten.
 - z. Present simple translations alone have been given; present progressive translations, of course, are just as proper: 'I am praising, you are praising/ etc.
 4. Since English relies on pronouns rather than personal endings, right from the start the student is advised to look upon the translation of verb-forms as a matter of analysis—the breaking up of the forms into their significant parts.

23. Word Order

Word order in Latin is not so closely tied to the basic meaning of a sentence as it is in English. For the most part, the inflection, or changing form, of Latin verbs and nouns constitutes the grammatical structure, whereas in English the word order contributes greatly to the grammatical structure. The form 'dog' gives no hint as to its possible use as a subject or an object; only in the word order of a sentence will the function of 'dog' be revealed: 'man bites dog'—object; 'dog bites man'—subject. These short sentences make clear the mutual relationships of their components: a noun beginning a sentence is construed as its subject; this noun is followed by the verb of the sentence; if there is an object in the sentence, it follows the verb: subject, verb, object. To change this order is to risk being misunderstood.

But in Latin, because the inflected forms carry with them information as to their function in the sentence, word order is often more a matter of emphasis and style: subject, verb, and object may occur in any order. There are some clear limitations: e.g., prepositions precede their cases; attributive adjectives are kept near their substantives.

In general, the beginning student is cautioned not to expect English word order in a Latin sentence; instead, an exact analysis of the inflectional endings should be made to uncover the basic meaning of a Latin sentence. With more experience, the student will learn to detect the subtle ancillary meanings which word order is capable of lending to Latin.

24. Coordination (Compound Sentences)

As in English, Latin sentences may be linked together to form compound sentences by the use of coordinating conjunctions; in English these include and, but, for, nor, and or. The use of a coordinating conjunction does not cause a sentence to lose its independent status: the sentences are merely joined; one does not become subordinate to the other.

Populus Deum laudat, nam bonus est.

'The people praise God, for He is good.'

25. Accusative as Direct Object

The accusative case may be used to express the direct object of a verb.

Populus Deum laudat.

'The people praise God.'

26. Dative as Indirect Object

The dative case may be used to express the indirect object of a verb of giving, telling, or showing.

Magister puerd praemium dat.

'The teacher is giving a reward to the boy.'

'The teacher is giving the boy a reward.'

[do, dare, dedi, datus 'give']

27. Ablative of Separation

After verbs of freeing, separating, or depriving, an ablative of separation may occur, with or without a preposition (ab or ex).

Dominus populum (d) maid liberat.

'The Lord frees His people from evil.'

[libero, liberate, liberavi, liberatus 'free']

28. Compounding of Verbs: Prepositions as Prefixes

In English, prepositions are often used with simple verbs to make compound verbs. For example, the verb 'to cut' may take on more specialized meanings in combination with prepositions: cut in, cut out, cut up, cut down. Sometimes verbs have the prepositions attached to them as prefixes: to hold: to uphold; to run: to outrun; to turn: to overturn; to stand: to *with*stand. This far less common method of compounding in English is the normative one in Latin.

With regard to the compounding of verbs in Latin, two phenomena are to be noticed: 1) assimilated spellings of the prepositions-as-prefixes; 2) vowel shifts in the verbs.

1) The more commonly compounded prepositions and their assimilated forms are these:

a (ab, abs): a-, ah-, abs-, au-ad: a-, ac-, ad-, af-, ag-, al-, an-, ap-, ar-, as-, atcircum: circu-, circum-

contra: contra-cum: co-, co-, col-, com-, con-, con-, corde: de-, dee (ex): e-, ef-, exin: i-, il-, im-, in-, in-, ir-inter: intel-, inter-ob: o-, oh-, oc-, of-, op-, [obs >] os-per: pel-, per-post: postprae: prae-, pre-pro: pro-, pro-

sub: su-, sub-, sue-, suf-, sug-, sum-, sup-, sur-, [subs >] sus-super: super-

trans: tra-, trans-

Note: Inseparable prefixes (those which are not also used as prepositions) include re-, dis-, and se-.

2) When compounded, verbs may shift their internal vowels. For example, sacro, sacrare, sacravi, sacratus 'make holy, consecrate' compounded with cum becomes consecro, consecrate, consecravi, consecratus. (Note: Since -er- does not make for position in prose, consecro is pronounced cdnsecro.)

The frequency of compound verbs constitutes a distinctive feature of ecclesiastical Latin. Often the compound is merely a strengthened form of the simple verb, and the difference in meaning is negligible. As a case in point, sacro and consecro differ very little in meaning.

29. Parsing

The parsing of a sentence entails a complete analysis of its components; this includes identifying the parts of speech, and explaining in full their forms, functions, and interrelationships.

Populus Deum laudat.

'The people praise God.'

populus: nominative singular masculine, from the noun populus, populi, m. 'people'; subject of laudat.

Deum: accusative singular masculine, from the noun Deus, Dei, m. 'God'; direct object of laudat.

laudat: third-person singular, present indicative active, from the verb laudd, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'; agrees in number with the subject, populus; third person because it makes a statement about the subject; present indicative because it states a fact in present time; active voice because the action passes from the subject (to the object).

Since the mastery of Latin is a matter of analysis, a student's translation of a sentence must be the product of analysis, not of guesswork.

Vocabulary Notes

Ambulo means 'to walk,' but metaphorically it may mean 'to live/' as in the expression, 'to walk in the way of the Lord.' Ambulo, like most first conjugation verbs, has the pattern -d, -are, -avi, -atus.

Do and dono basically mean 'give'; occasionally, dono means 'for-give.' Both take a direct and an indirect object: give something to someone. Do, although a first conjugation verb, does not have principal parts which conform to the predominant pattern; note especially the short -a- in dare.

Collaudo is compounded of com- and laudd; com-, which here assimilates to col-, may either intensify the basic meaning ('completely') or add the notion 'jointly, together.'

Regno is a denominative verb formed from regnum (Unit z). De- nominative verbs are most often derived from nouns and adjectives, and given the form of a first conjugation verb. Other such verbs—in this unit alone—are dono, laudd, libero, opero, ord, sacro, servo, and voco.

Documentum 'example' is formed from the root of the verb doceo 'teach' (Unit 19) and the suffix -mentum 'instrument.'

Enim 'for' is weaker than nam (Unit 2); it is postpositive, i.e., it occurs toward the beginning of its clause, but never first. In contrast, merito 'rightly, deservedly'—though an adverb—tends to stand at the beginning of its clause or phrase.

Quoque 'too, also' immediately follows the word it emphasizes.

Unit 6

30. Present Indicative Active: Second Conjugation

To form the present indicative active of a second conjugation verb, from the present infinitive (the second principal part) remove the ending -re- then add the active personal endings.

moned, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'

present infinitive: monere

present stem: mone-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	moned ('I warn')	monemus ('we warn')
2	mones ('you warn')	monetis ('you warn')
3	monet ('he/she/it warns')	monent ('they warn')

- Notes:*
- i. The stem vowel -e- shortens before another vowel (-o) in the first-person singular (see Section i.a, Note z).
 2. The stem vowel shortens before the endings -t and -nt.

31. Present Indicative Active: Third Conjugation

There are two kinds of third conjugation verbs: the '-o' type (e.g., duco, ducere . . .) and the '-io' type (e.g., capfo, capere . . .).

a. -o' Type To form the present indicative active of an '-o' type verb of the third conjugation, remove the ending -re from the present infinitive and alter the stem vowel to -i- (but -u- for the third-person plural); then add the active personal endings.

duco, ducere, duxi, ductus 'lead'

present infinitive: ducere

present stem: duce- > duci-, ducu-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	duco ('I lead')	ducimus ('we lead')
2	ducis ('you lead')	ducitis ('you lead')
3	ducit ('he/she/it leads')	ducunt ('they lead')

Notes: 1. The stem vowel is dropped in the first-person singular.

2. The stem vowel -e- is weakened to -i- in all other forms except the third-person plural, where it weakens to -u-.

b. '-io' Type To form the present indicative active of an '-id' type verb of the third conjugation, remove the ending -re from the present infinitive and alter the stem vowel to -i- (but -iu- for the third-person plural); then add the active personal endings.

capid, capere, cepi, captus 'take, receive'

present infinitive: capere present stem: cape- > capi-, capiu-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	capid ('I take')	capimus ('we take')
2	capis ('you take')	capitis ('you take')
3	capit ('he/she/it takes')	capiunt ('they take')

32. Present Indicative Active: Fourth Conjugation

To form the present indicative active of a fourth conjugation verb, remove the ending -re from the present infinitive; then add the active personal endings. The third-person plural adds -u- to the stem before the ending (causing the stem vowel to shorten).

audio, audire, audiui, auditus 'hear'

present infinitive: audire

present stem: audi- (audiu-)

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	audio ('I hear')	audimus ('we hear')
2	audis ('you hear')	auditis ('you hear')
3	audit ('he/she/it hears')	audiunt ('they hear')

- Notes:* i. The stem vowel shortens before another vowel in the first singular and the third plural.
2. The stem vowel shortens before the ending -t.

33. Direct Questions (1)

A direct statement may be converted into a direct question by attaching the enclitic particle -ne to the first word. But more often, context alone determines when a statement is to be construed as a question.

Vocatne Petrus discipulum?

'Is Peter calling the disciple?'

Angeli in caelis Deum collaudant?

'Do the angels in heaven together praise God?'

These are sentence questions; far more frequently, a question is introduced by an interrogative word, such as the adverbs ubi 'where?' and quare 'for what reason? why?'

Quare Dominum non laudant?

'Why do they not praise the Lord?'

34. Ablative of Means

The ablative case of an inanimate noun may be used to express the means by which the action of a sentence is accomplished. Occasionally, the Latin of the Vulgate uses the preposition in with this construction.

Dominum psalmis laudamus.

'We praise the Lord with {by means of} psalms.'

Iusti in gladiis regnant?

'Do righteous men rule by {by means of} the sword.'

35. Ablative of Manner

The ablative case of an abstract noun may be used to express the manner or style in which the action of a sentence is carried out. The preposition cum is always used if the noun is not modified by an adjective; the preposition may be omitted if the noun is modified.

Dominum cum gaudio laudamus.

'We praise the Lord with joy (joyfully).'

Dominum magno (cum) gaudio laudamus.

'With great joy we praise the Lord.'

- Notes:*
1. The ablative of manner may often be translated with an English adverb in -ly (since -ly means 'in a specified manner').
 2. When both the preposition and an adjective are used with the ablative of manner, the adjective often begins the phrase: magno cum gaudio.

Vocabulary Notes

Reddo and trado (< trans + do) are compounds of do 'give.' Reddo has the inseparable prefix re(d)- ('back, again'); see Section 28.1, Note. Although do is a first conjugation verb, many of its compounds are of the third conjugation.

Habeo has both a physical meaning, 'have, hold,' and a mental one, 'hold [in mind]: consider.' Compare 'we hold these truths . . .'

Monet may take a personal accusative and an infinitive: monet puerum operate 'he advises the boy to work.'

Note that agere means 'do, drive, conduct,' but that gratias agere is an idiom meaning 'give thanks (to), thank'; the person thanked is put into the dative case.

Credo may take a dative (credo puero 'I trust [in] the boy') or in + accusative (credimus in Deum 'we believe in God').

Duco 'lead' is one of many verbs which easily form compounds. Seducō uses the inseparable prefix se- 'apart from, astray'; hence, it means 'lead astray, deceive.'

Capīd has a physical meaning, 'take, receive,' and a mental, 'understand,' as in the English, 'if you take my meaning.'

Besides an accusative as direct object, facio may take an accusative + infinitive, meaning 'to make or cause someone to do something': tacit puerum operare 'he makes (causes) the boy (to) work.'

Natus 'son, child' is a noun derived from the verb nascor 'to be born' (Unit 20).

Note that domus is a second declension feminine noun.

Christianus 'Christian' is an adjective compounded of the base of the noun Christus + the adjectival suffix -ianus, -a, -um 'pertaining to, belonging to.'

Unit 7

36. Present Indicative Passive: All Four Conjugations

Any transitive verb may occur in the passive voice. It forms its present indicative passive by adding to the present stem the passive personal endings. These endings signal the person, the number, and the voice.

PASSIVE PERSONAL ENDINGS

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	-or (-r)	-mur
2	-ris, -re	-mini
3	-tur	-ntur

- Notes:*
- i. The alternate first-person singular ending (-r) is not used in the present indicative.
 2. In the second-person singular, both -ris and -re are found.

FIRST CONJUGATION:

lando, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'

present infinitive: laudare

present stem: lauda-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudor (T am praised')	laudamur ('we are praised')
2	laudaris, laudare ('you are praised')	laudamini ('you are praised')
3	laudatur ('he/she/it is praised')	laudentur ('they are praised')

- Notes:*
- i. The stem vowel drops before the ending -or.
 2. One form of the second-person singular is identical in spelling with the present infinitive; context will reveal which is intended.
 - z. The stem vowel shortens before the ending -ntur.
 4. Present progressive translations are equally appropriate: 'I am being praised, you are being praised,' etc.

SECOND CONJUGATION:

moned, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'

present infinitive: monere

present stem: mone-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	moneor ('I am warned')	monemur ('we are warned')
2	moneris, monere ('you are warned')	monemini ('you are warned')
z	monetur ('he/she/it is warned')	monentur ('they are warned')

- Notes:*
1. The stem vowel in the first singular shortens before another vowel.
 2. The stem vowel shortens before the ending -ntur.

THIRD CONJUGATION, '-6' TYPE

duco, ducere, duxi, ductus 'lead'

present infinitive: ducere

present stem: duce- > duci-, ducu-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ducor ('I am led')	ducimur ('we are led')
2	duceris, ducere ('you are led')	ducimini ('you are led')
3	ducitur ('he/she/it is led')	ducuntur ('they are led')

Note: The stem vowel is dropped before the ending -or.

THIRD CONJUGATION, '-io' TYPE:capio, capere, cepi, captus 'take, receive'present infinitive: caperepresent stem: cape- > capi-, capiu-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	capior ('I am taken')	capimur ('we are taken')
2	caperis, capere ('you are taken')	capimini ('you are taken')
3	capitur ('he/she/it is taken')	capiuntur ('they are taken')

Note: In all third conjugation verbs, both second singular forms retain the original stem vowel (-e-).

FOURTH CONJUGATION:audio, audire, audivi, auditus 'hear'present infinitive: audirepresent stem: audi- (audiu-)

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	audior ('I am heard')	audimur ('we are heard')
2	audiris, audire ('you are heard')	audimini ('you are heard')
3	auditur ('he/she/it is heard')	audiuntur ('they are heard')

Note: The stem vowel in the first singular shortens before another vowel.

37. Ablative of Personal Agency

The ablative case may be used with a personal noun to express the doer or agent of a verb in the passive voice. The preposition a (ab, abs) is always used in this construction.

Nostra peccata d Christo delentur.'Our sins are destroyed by Christ.'

38. Ablative with Certain Adjectives

The adjectives dignus, -a, -um 'worthy (of),' indignus, -a, -um 'un-worthy (of),' and plenus, -a, -um 'full (of)' govern the ablative case.

Puer est praemid dignus (indignus).

'The boy is worthy (not worthy) of a reward.'

Terra est gloria Dei plena.

'The earth is full of the glory of God.'

Note: Distinguish between the use of the preposition of to link these special adjectives with their ablatives and its use in general to translate the genitive case.

Vocabulary Notes

Firmo 'strengthen, make steady' is the denominative verb formed from the adjective firmus 'steadfast, firm.'

Died 'say, tell' takes either a dative of indirect object or ad + accusative: died populo 'I tell the people,' died ad populum 'I say to the people.' When it means 'tell' in the sense of 'give an order (to),' died takes a dative + infinitive: dicat puero operare 'he tells the boy to work.' In the passive voice, died may mean 'be called'; as such, it is the equivalent of a copulative verb and takes a predicate nominative: Petrus dicitur papa 'Peter is called pope.' [Likewise, efficit (Unit 6) in the passive may function as a copulative: Petrus efficitur papa 'Peter is made (becomes) pope.'] The compounds benedied and maledico may take either a dative or an accusative: benedicit puero/puerum 'he blesses the boy.'

Anima has a dative/ablative plural in -abus, to prevent its being confused with the dative/ablative plural of animus (Unit 4)—animis. Any first declension noun whose base is identical with that of a second declension noun may use this alternate ending.

Laetitia means 'gladness, joy' as an outward expression of emotion. Cf. gaudium (Unit 2).

Liturgia, derived from the Greek, literally means 'work of the people.'

Diaconus 'deacon' is taken from the Greek for servant.

Carus 'dear, beloved' may have its meaning supplemented by a dative: carus erat Mariae 'he was dear to Mary.'

Besides its use with an ablative, dignus (or indignus) may occasionally be used with a genitive (in imitation of the Greek idiom).

An infinitive may also be used with these adjectives: dignus est invocare Deum 'he is worthy to call upon God.'

Plenus 'full of' takes an ablative, but sometimes a genitive: plena est gratia/gratiae 'she is full of grace.'

Universus 'all, the whole' is the adjective from which the noun universum (Unit 3) is derived.

Onus 'one' is sometimes the virtual equivalent of the indefinite article 'a, an.'

Unit 7 adds a new meaning to a (ab, abs): 'by (the agency of).' Cf. a (ab, abs) in Unit 1.

Bene 'well' is the adverb derived from the adjective bonus (Unit 4).

The declension of Jesus is unique; its forms must be specially memorized.

Male 'badly, poorly,' the adverb from malus (Unit 4), when used with forms of habed, yields the idiom 'to be sick.'

Unit 8

39. Imperfect Indicative Active: All Four Conjugations

The imperfect is the past progressive tense. To form the imperfect indicative active of any verb, first construct the imperfect base: remove the ending -re from the present infinitive to isolate the present stem, lengthen the stem vowel, if it is short, and add the tense-making suffix -ba-. Then add the active personal endings (the first-person singular always uses the alternate ending -m, not -o). Third conjugation verbs of the '-id' type and fourth conjugation verbs alter the present stem to end in -ie-.

FIRST CONJUGATION:

laudd, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'

present stem: lauda-

imperfect base: lauda- + -ba- = laudaba-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudabam ('I was praising')	laudabamus ('we were praising')
2	laudabas ('you were praising')	laudabatis ('you were praising')
z	laudabat ('he/she/it was praising')	laudabant ('they were praising')

- Notes:*
1. Since the progressive aspect also includes habitual or repeated action, these forms may thus be translated: 'I used to praise, I kept on praising.'
 2. The endings -m, -t, and -nt shorten the vowel of the tense-making suffix. This is the case in the imperfect active forms of all other conjugations.

SECOND CONJUGATION:moneb, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'present stem: mone-imperfect base: mone- + -ba- – moneba-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	monebam ('I was warning')	monebamus ('we were warning')
2	monebas ('you were warning')	monebatis ('you were warning')
3	monebat ('he/she/it was warning')	monebant ('they were warning')

THIRD CONJUGATION, -o' TYPE:duc, ducere, duxi, ductus 'lead'present stem: duce- > duce-imperfect base: duce- + -ba- – duceba-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ducebam ('I was leading')	ducebamus ('we were leading')
2	ducebas ('you were leading')	ducebatis ('you were leading')
3	ducebat ('he/she/it was leading')	ducebant ('they were leading')

THIRD CONJUGATION, '-io' TYPE:cap, capere, cepi, captus 'take, receive'present stem: cape- > capie-imperfect base: capie- + -ba- – capieba-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	capiebam ('I was taking')	capiebamus ('we were taking')
2	capiebas ('you were taking')	capiebatis ('you were taking')
3	capiebat ('he/she/it was taking')	capiebant ('they were taking')

FOURTH CONJUGATION:audio, audire, audiui, auditus 'hear'present stem: audi- > audie-imperfect base: audie- + -ba- = audieba

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	audiebam ('I was hearing')	audiebamus ('we were hearing')
2	audiebas ('you were hearing')	audiebatis ('you were hearing')
3	audiebat ('he/she/it was hearing')	audiebant ('they were hearing')

40. Imperfect Indicative Passive: All Four Conjugations

To form the imperfect indicative passive of any verb, first construct the imperfect base as detailed in Section 39; then add the passive personal endings (the first-person singular uses the alternate ending -r, not -or).

FIRST CONJUGATION:laudd, laudare, laudavi, laudatusimperfect base: laudaba-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudabar ('I was being praised')	laudabamur ('we were being praised')
2	laudabaris, laudabare ('you were being praised')	laudabamini ('you were being praised')
3	laudabatur ('he/she/it was being praised')	laudabantur ('they were being praised')

Note: The endings -r and -ntur shorten the vowel of the tense-making suffix. This is the case in the imperfect passive forms of all other conjugations.

SECOND CONJUGATION:moneo, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'imperfect base: moneba-

SINGULAR

- 1 monebar ('I was being warned')
- 2 monebaris, monebare ('you were being warned')
- 3 monebatur ('he/she/it was being warned')

PLURAL

- monebamur ('we were being warned')
- monebamim ('you were being warned')
- monebantur ('they were being warned')

THIRD CONJUGATION, -o' TYPE:

duco, ducere, dux!, ductus 'lead'

imperfect base: duceba-

SINGULAR

- 1 ducebar ('I was being led')
- 2 ducebaris, ducerebare ('you were being led')
- 3 ducebatur ('he/she/it was being led')

PLURAL

- ducebamur ('we were being led')
- ducebamini ('you were being led')
- ducebantur ('they were being led')

THIRD CONJUGATION, -io' TYPE:

capio, capere, cepi, captus 'take, receive' imperfect base: capieba-

SINGULAR

- 1 capiebar ('I was being taken')
- 2 capiebaris, capiebare ('you were being taken')
- 3 capiebatur ('he/she/it was being taken')

PLURAL

- capiebamur ('we were being taken')
- capiebamini ('you were being taken')
- capiebantur ('they were being taken')

FOURTH CONJUGATION:

audio, audire, audiui, auditus 'hear'

imperfect base: audieba-

SINGULAR

- 1 audiebar ('I was being heard')
- 2 audiebaris, audiebare ('you were being heard')
- 3 audiebatur ('he/she/it was being heard')

PLURAL

- audiebamur ('we were being heard')
- audiebamini ('you were being heard')
- audiebantur ('they were being heard')

41. Subordination (Complex Sentences)

A typical complex sentence contains two clauses: one independent and one dependent. Dependent, or subordinate, clauses are of three kinds: adverbial, adjectival, and substantive. An adverbial dependent clause is a sentence which has lost its independence by the addition of a certain kind of subordinating conjunction. In English, these include after, although, because, if, since, when, and while. The purpose of such subordinate clauses is to indicate a circumstance which sets the idea of the independent clause in a clearer light.

- i. It rained. The picnic was postponed.
- i. It rained and the picnic was postponed.
- z. Because it rained, the picnic was postponed.

The first example gives two independent clauses; the second links them to make a compound sentence (see Section 24). In both, the listener is left to sort out the relationship. But the third example, by subordinating the first clause to the second, clearly establishes their cause-and-effect relationship; in it, one clause is reduced to a dependent clause exerting the force of an adverb.

In Latin, such adverbial clauses include temporal, concessive, conditional, and causal clauses.

42. Causal Clauses

A causal clause is an adverbial dependent clause which gives a reason for the action of the independent clause. It may be introduced by any of these subordinating conjunctions: quia, quod, quoniam 'because.'

Dominum laudamus, quia (quod, quoniam) sanctus est.
'We praise the Lord, because He is holy.'

43. Indirect Statements (1): Object Clauses

An indirect statement functions grammatically as a noun; in English it is commonly introduced by the subordinating conjunction that. Such a substantive clause may occasionally be used as a subject, but far more often is used as an object.

An indirect statement in the form of an object clause in Latin occurs after a verb of saying, knowing, or thinking; it is introduced by a subordinating conjunction, quod, quia, quoniam 'that/ and may employ the indicative mood. It is the norm in both languages to make any logical adjustment in tense and personal reference.

direct	statement	:	Christianus sum. 'I am a Christian.'
indirect	statement	:	Dicebat Petro quia (quod, quoniam) Christianus erat. 'He used to tell Peter that he was a Christian.'

- Notes:*
1. Although quia, quod, and quoniam mean both 'because' and 'that,' context will reveal whether their clause is adverbial (a causal clause) or substantive (an object clause).
 2. Dico, as a verb of saying (or telling) takes an indirect object (Petro) and a direct object (quia Christianus erat). See Section 26.
 3. In imitation of Greek, an 'anticipatory' accusative may be found: dixit Jesum quoniam erat filius Dei 'he said Jesus that he was the son of God' – dixit quoniam Jesus erat filius Dei 'he said that Jesus was the son of God.'
 4. A primary tense in the direct statement may be retained after a secondary main verb: dixit quod est Christianus 'he said that he was a Christian.'

44. Ellipsis

In both English and Latin a word or words needed to complete a grammatical construction may be omitted when they can be understood from the preceding clauses. This common feature of language is called ellipsis: she sings as well as Amy [sings]; Dan is taller than I [am tall]; I went for a walk, but Meg didn't [go for a walk].

Boni Deum laudant, sed mail non.

'Good men praise God, but evil men do not.'

[sed (coord, conj.) 'but, yet']

Vocabulary Notes

The verb -pled 'fill, complete' occurs only in compound form.

Dirigo has the inseparable prefix dis- (di-) 'apart, away.'

Meritum is a noun from which the adverb merito (Unit 5) has been taken.

Angelicus 'angelic' is formed from the base of the noun angelus + the adjectival suffix -icus, -a, -um 'pertaining to.'

The adjective gloriosus is compounded of the base of the noun gloria (Unit 1) + the adjectival suffix -osus, -a, -um 'full of.'

Distinguish between the homonyms mundus, -a, -um 'pure, clean' and mundus, mundi, m. 'world' (Unit 4).

Sacrosanctus 'most holy, venerable' in its elements means 'consecrated with a religious ceremony.'

The adjective terrenus 'earthly' is made from terra (Unit 1) and the adjectival suffix -enus, -a, -um 'pertaining to.'

Jam tends to mean 'already' with any past tense, 'now' with the present, and 'soon' with a future.

Per (prep. + acc.), just as in English, may mean 'through' in four different senses: time, space, agency, and instrumentality; per horam 'through an hour,' per agrum 'through the field,' per Christum 'through Christ,' per potentiam 'through his power.'

Quod, quia, and quoniam mean 'that' or 'because'; occasionally, eo quod 'because' occurs.

2	laudabis ('you will praise')	laudabitis ('you will praise')
3	laudabit ('he/she/it will praise')	laudabunt ('they will praise')

Note: The -i- of the suffix is absorbed in the first singular and changed to -u- in the third plural.

SECOND CONJUGATION:

moneb, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'

present stem: mone-

future base: mone- + -bi- = monebi-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL

46. Future Indicative Passive: First and Second Conjugations

The future indicative passive for verbs of the first and second conjugations is compounded of the present stem + the tense-making suffix -bi- + the passive personal endings.

FIRST CONJUGATION:

laudd, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'

future base: laudabi-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudabor ('I will be praised')	laudabimur ('we will be praised')
2	laudaberis, laudabere ('you will be praised')	laudabimini ('you will be praised')
3	laudabitur ('he/she/it will be praised')	laudabuntur ('they will be praised')

Note: The -i- of the suffix is absorbed in the first singular, changed to -e- in the second singular, and changed to -u- in the third plural. Cf. erd and erunt.

SECOND CONJUGATION:

moneo, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'

future base: monebi-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	monebor ('I will be warned')	monebimur ('we will be warned')
2	moneberis, monebere ('you will be warned')	monebimini ('you will be warned')
3	monebitur ('he/she/it will be warned')	monebuntur ('they will be warned')

Note: The -i- of the suffix is absorbed in the first singular, changed to -e- in the second singular, and changed to -u- in the third plural.

47. Future Indicative Active: Third and Fourth Conjugations

The future indicative base in the third and fourth conjugations ends in -e-, lengthened from -e- of the present stem of the '-o' type in the third conjugation, or added to the present stem in the fourth conjugation. The -io type of the third conjugation has -ie-. The future indicative active of these conjugations is formed by adding the active personal endings to the future base.

THIRD CONJUGATION, -o' TYPE:

duco, ducere, duxi, ductus 'lead'

present stem: duce-

future base: duce-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ducam ('I will lead')	ducemus ('we will lead')
2	duces ('you will lead')	ducetis ('you will lead')
3	ducet ('he/she/it will lead')	ducent ('they will lead')

- Notes:*
1. Short -a- appears as the tense sign in the first singular before the alternate ending -m.
 2. Long -e- shortens before -t and -nt, as usual.

THIRD CONJUGATION, '-id' TYPE:

capid, capere, cepi, captus 'take, receive'

present stem: cape- future base: capie-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	capiam ('I will take')	capiemus ('we will take')

2. Long -e- shortens before -t and -nt, as usual.

FOURTH CONJUGATION:

audio, audire, audiui, auditus 'hear'

present stem: audl-future base: audie-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	audiam ('I will hear')	audiemus ('we will hear')
2	audies ('you will hear')	audietis ('you will hear')
3	audiet ('he/she/it will hear')	audient ('they will hear')

- Notes:* i. Short-a- appears as the tense sign in the first singular before the alternate ending -m.
2. Long -e- shortens before -t and -nt, as usual.

48. Future Indicative Passive: Third and Fourth Conjugations

The future indicative passive for verbs of the third and fourth conjugations is formed by adding the passive personal endings to the future base.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ducar ('I will be led')	ducemur ('we will be led')
2	duceris, ducere ('you will be led')	ducemini ('you will be led')
3	ducetur ('he/she/it will be led')	ducentur ('they will be led')
1	capiar ('I will be taken')	capiemur ('we will be taken')
2	capiaris, capiere ('you will be taken')	capiemini ('you will be taken')
3	capietur ('he/she/it will be taken')	capiuntur ('they will be taken')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	audiar ('I will be heard')	audiemur ('we will be heard')
2	audieris, audiere ('you will be heard')	audiemini ('you will be heard')
3	audietur ('he/she/it will be heard')	audientur ('they will be heard')

Note: Again, -a- appears as the tense sign in the first-person singular.

49. Infinitive as Subject

Since an infinitive is a verbal noun (see Section 2of.2), it may be used as the subject of a sentence. A predicate adjective modifying a subject infinitive has a nominative singular neuter ending.

Bonum est invocdre Deum.

'To call upon God is good.'

'It is good to call upon God.'

Note: In the second translation, the use of the expletive it allows the subject to be delayed.

50. Ablative of Respect (Specification)

The ablative of respect, or specification, indicates a specific category in terms of which a judgment is made.

Servus Domini est animd beatus.

'The servant of the Lord is happy in (respect to) spirit.'

Vocabulary Notes

The primitive verb from which adjuvo is formed—juvo, which also means 'help'—is not formally presented in this text.

Intro 'enter' may take an accusative, with or without a preposition (in or ad): intrat (in/ad) domum 'he enters the house.'

It is hardly surprising that video has both a physical and a mental meaning: 'see- realize.' Cf. 'do you see that?'

The ablative of causa 'purpose, reason' may be used as an improper preposition—causa 'for the sake of'—taking either a preceding genitive or an accompanying ablative of a possessive adjective: Petri causa 'for the sake of Peter,' mea causa 'for my sake.'

Altus indicates distance up or down- hence, 'high, deep.'

Catholicus is taken from the Greek for 'universal.'

Autem may be used to continue a narrative ('and') or to indicate a weak adversative idea ('but').

Vere 'truly' is the adverb formed from the adjective verus (Unit 4).

Unit 10

51. The Perfect-Active System: Three Tenses

In all four conjugations, the stem of the first-person singular, perfect indicative active (i.e., the third principal part) is the source of three indicative tenses: the perfect active, the pluperfect active, and the future-perfect active. The perfect active is formed from the perfect active stem + a set of endings unique to the perfect active; the pluperfect active and the future-perfect active are formed from the perfect active stem + a tense-making suffix + the active personal endings.

52. Perfect Indicative Active: All Four Conjugations

The perfect represents two tenses: the past simple ('I did') and the present completed ('I have done'). Context will determine which translation is more appropriate. (See Section 20c.)

The perfect indicative active is formed by removing the ending -! from the third principal part to determine the stem, and then adding the following set of endings:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	-I	-imus
2	-isti	-istis
3	-it	-erunt

For example:

laudo, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'

perfect stem: laudav-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
i	laudavi ('I [have] praised')	laudavimus ('we [have] praised')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
2	laudavisti ('you [have] praised')	laudavistis ('you [have] praised')
3	laudavit ('he/she/it [has] praised')	laudaverunt ('they [have] praised')

Note: Forms such as laudavisti and laudavistis may be contracted (laudasti, laudastis), with no difference in meaning.

sum, esse, kui, futurus 'be, exist' perfect stem: ku-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	fui ('I was, I have been')	fuimus ('we were, have been')
2	fuisti ('you were, you have been')	fuistis ('you were, have been')
3	fuit ('he/she/it was, he/she/it has been')	fuerunt ('they were, have been')

53. Relative Pronoun/Interrogative Adjective: qui, quae, quod

As a relative pronoun, qui, quae, quod introduces an adjectival clause (see Section 41) which modifies the antecedent of the pronoun; it is translated by who, whose, whom, or which, depending on the case and the referent. As an interrogative adjective, it modifies a noun and asks a question; it is translated by what or which.

qui, quae, quod 'who, which; what? which?'

Abl.	quo	qua	quo	quibus	quibus	quibus

54. Uses of the Relative Pronoun

As a relative pronoun, qui, quae, quod is used in adjectival clauses and as a connective between sentences.

a. Adjectival Clauses The relative pronoun, like an adjective, has gender, number, and case. It derives its gender and number from its antecedent (which may be either expressed or implied), but takes its case from its function in its own clause.

Deus, quem in psalmis laudamus, est bonus.

'God, Whom we praise in psalms, is good.'

Here quem introduces an adjectival clause modifying Deus. Quem is masculine and singular because its antecedent, Deus, is masculine and singular. But it is in the accusative case because in its own clause it is the direct object of laudamus.

The antecedent of a relative pronoun may be left unexpressed.

Beat!, qui in via Domini ambulat.

'[Those] who walk in the way of the Lord are blessed.'

b. Connective Relative A relative pronoun may be used as the equivalent of a conjunction (and or or) and a demonstrative pronoun (this one, that one, or simply, he, she, or it).

Discipuli in domum veniebant. Qui cum laetitia Jesum audiebant.

'The disciples were coming into the house. And they were gladly listening to Jesus.'

55. Use of the Interrogative Adjective

The interrogative adjective, like any other adjective, agrees with the word it modifies in gender, number, and case.

Qui minister hodie missam celebrabat?

'Which minister was celebrating Mass today?'

Qui is masculine, singular, and nominative because minister is masculine, singular, and nominative.

Vocabulary Notes

Clerus 'clergy' is taken from the Greek meaning 'inheritance',- the only inheritance of the Levites was the Lord.

Ministerium 'ministry, service' is an abstract noun formed from minister (Unit 2) and the abstract-noun-making suffix -ium, -ii.

Secundus literally means 'following'; hence, 'next, second.' From this adjective the preposition secundum 'according to' has been derived.

Ante 'before' has both a temporal and a spatial meaning: ante annum 'a year before'; ante domum 'before (in front of) the home.'

When used in nominal sentences, ecce means 'here is': ecce ancilla Domini 'here is the servant of the Lord.'

Eleison, despite its long penult, retains its Greek accentuation: eleison.

Qui, quae, quod has a more general meaning when suffixed by -cumque: quicumque, quaecumque, quodcumque 'whichever, whoever, whatever.' When used with the preposition cum 'with' the ablative precedes and coalesces with it: quocum 'with whom,' quibuscum 'with whom.' The relative may precede other prepositions, e.g., quern propter 'on account of which/whom.' A connective relative even precedes a subordinating conjunction: Qui quoniam . . . 'And because they . . .'

Unit 11

56. Pluperfect Indicative Active: All Four Conjugations

The pluperfect is the past completed tense, translated in English with the auxiliary 'had.' To form the pluperfect indicative active of any verb, first construct the pluperfect base: remove the ending -i from the third principal part to isolate the perfect-active stem, add the tense-making suffix -era-, and add the active personal endings.

For example:

laudo, laudare, laudavi, laudatus 'praise'

perfect stem: laudav-

pluperfect base: laudav- + -era- = laudavera-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudaveram ('I had praised')	laudaveramus ('we had praised')
2	laudaveras ('you had praised')	laudaveratis ('you had praised')
3	laudaverat ('he/she/it had praised')	laudaverant ('they had praised')

57. Future-Perfect Indicative Active: All Four Conjugations

The future-perfect is the future completed tense, translated in English with the auxiliaries 'will have.' It is compounded of the perfect-active stem + the tense-making suffix -er- + the active personal endings.

For example:

capid, capere, cepi, captus 'take, receive'

perfect stem: cep-

future-perfect base: cep- + -er- = ceperi-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
i	cepero ('I will have taken')	ceperimus ('we will have taken')
2	ceperis ('you will have taken')	ceperitis ('you will have taken')
3	ceperit ('he/she/it will have taken')	ceperint ('they will have taken')

Note: The -l- of the suffix is dropped before the ending -o.

58. Ablative of Cause

The ablative case (with or without a preposition) may be used to express the cause of an action or state.

Beat! sumus (e) victoria Domini.

'We are happy because of the victory of the Lord.'

59. Direct Quotations

The exact words of a speaker may be quoted directly. In the traditional Vulgate Bible, quotation marks are not used; capitalization alone is used to indicate the beginning of a quotation.

a. No Change The speaker's words are quoted with no change.

Puer dixit, Mea familia est hic.

'The boy said, "My family is here."'

b. No change, but introduced by quia or quoniam The speaker's words are quoted with no change, but may be introduced by an untranslated sign-word, quia or quoniam.

Puer dixit, Quia (Quoniam) mea familia est hic.

'The boy said, "My family is here."'

Note: Following contemporary practices, the Nova Vulgata uses quotation marks and has eliminated the use of quia or quoniam to introduce direct quotations.

Vocabulary Notes

The verb -clino 'bend' is used only in compounds. When used without a direct object, reclind occurs in the passive (equivalent to the Greek middle): reclinabantur 'they were reclining.'

Exsulto and resulto are frequentative verbs derived from the primitive verb salid 'leap.' For exsulto 'rejoice,' compare the expression, 'jump for joy.'

When facio 'do, make' (Unit 6) is compounded with a noun or an adjective, it changes from the third conjugation to the first: gloria + facio – glorified (glorificare, etc.) 'make glorious, glorify.' The same observation may be made about sanctified.

Grego is a denominative verb derived from the noun grex (Unit 18) meaning 'flock.'

The Hebrew nouns Adam and Pascha are declined as first declension nouns. Adam, in form, may be either nominative or accusative.

Creatura literally means the 'act of or the result of the act of creating'; hence, 'creation, creature.' Scriptura uses the same noun-making suffix (-ura).

Propheta is taken from the Greek meaning 'one who speaks forth.'

Laetus is the adjective from which the noun laetitia (Unit 7) is formed.

There is little or no difference in meaning between parvus and parvulus; they are often used substantively to mean 'little one,' hence 'child.'

Unit 12

60. The Auxiliary Verb possum 'be able': All Six Indicative Tenses

An important auxiliary verb is possum, posse, potui, — 'be able, can.' Its present, imperfect, and future tenses are formed by adding pot- to those tenses of sum. (Before a consonant, pot- becomes pos-.)

		SINGULAR	PLURAL
PRESENT TENSE:	1	possum ('I can')	possumus ('we can')
	2	potes ('you can')	potestis ('you can')
	3	potest ('he/she/it can')	possum ('they can')
IMPERFECT TENSE:	i	poteram ('I could')	poteramus ('we could')
	2	poteras ('you could')	poteratis ('you could')
	3	poterat ('he/she/it could')	poterant ('they could')
FUTURE TENSE:	i	potero ('I will be able')	poterimus ('we will be able')
	2	poteris ('you will be able')	poteritis ('you will be able')
	3	poterit ('he/she/it will be able')	poterunt ('they will be able')

The perfect, pluperfect, and future-perfect tenses are formed in the regular manner from the third principal part: potui, potuisti, etc.; potueram, potueras, etc.; potuerd, potueris, etc.

61. Complementary Infinitive

Certain verbs ordinarily need a present infinitive—i.e., the second principal part of a verb—to complete the meaning.

Dominum laudre possumus.

'We are able to praise the Lord.'

62. Object Infinitive

Akin to the complementary infinitive is the object infinitive, i.e., an infinitive used as the object of a transitive verb.

Pueri sciunt drdre.

'The boys know (how) to pray.'

63. The Perfect-Passive System: Three Compound Tenses

In all four conjugations, the fourth principal part—the perfect passive participle—is the source of three indicative tenses: the perfect passive, the pluperfect passive, and the future-perfect passive. These tenses are formed by using the participle with the appropriate tense of sum. Thus each form of these tenses is made up of two words. The participle always agrees with the subject (whether expressed or implied) in gender, number, and case. Thus only the nominative endings -us, -a, -um; -i, -ae, -a are used in the formation of these three tenses.

64. Perfect Indicative Passive: All Four Conjugations

The perfect indicative passive represents two tenses: the simple past passive ('it was done') and the present completed passive ('it has been done'). Context will determine the appropriate translation.

The perfect indicative passive is formed by using the fourth principal part in combination with the present tense of sum.

For example-

moned, monere, monui, monitus 'warn, advise'

SINGULAR

PLURAL

i monitus, -a, -um sum ('I was/have been warned') moniti, -ae, -a sumus ('we were/have been warned')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
2	monitus, -a, -um es ('you were/have been warned')	moniti, -ae, -a estis ('you were/have been warned')
z	monitus, -a, -um est ('he/she/it was/has been warned')	moniti, -ae, -a sunt ('they were/have been warned')

- Notes:*
- i. The student is cautioned not to confuse the present passive and the perfect passive. Compare moneor 'I am warned' and monitus sum 'I was warned.'
 2. The perfect tense—fui, fuisti, etc.—may be substituted for sum, es, est, etc., with no difference in meaning: monitus sum (monitus fui) 'I was/have been warned.'
 - z. Occasionally, the form of sum precedes the participle, with no difference in meaning: sum monitus – monitus sum.

65. Uses of the Perfect Passive Participle

The perfect passive participle is essentially an adjective; several adjectives already learned originated as perfect passive participles: e.g., sanctus, beatus, benedictus, electus, and contritus.

Besides its use in the formation of the compound tenses, this participle may be used exactly like an adjective, or with an adverbial force, the equivalent of a circumstantial clause (see Section 41). Like any adjective, it may be used as a substantive.

as an adjective :	Laudamus glorification Deum. 'We praise the glorified God.'
as a substantive :	Scimus adjutos a Petro. 'We know [the ones] (having been) helped by Peter.'
as the equivalent of an adverbial clause :	Puer, a diacono monitus, ecclesiam intravit. 'The boy, (having been) warned by the deacon, entered the church.' 'The boy, because/ although/ if/when he had been warned by the deacon, entered the church.'

Note that after the basic translation, 'having been _____ the student may try various translations (depending on the context) which render the participle in a finite form. A perfect participle, when translated as a clause, is given a tense prior to that of the main verb. (Occasionally, where sense demands, it may be translated with a tense contemporaneous with the main verb.)

Vocabulary Notes

Debed originated as a compound of de- 'away from' and habed 'have, hold' (Unit 6): a debtor holds what he owes away from his creditor.

Note that videor, the passive of video (Unit 9), means 'seem' when used with an infinitive.

Surgo is compounded of sub + rego (subrego > surrigo > surgo).

Incipid means 'take upon' oneself, and so 'begin',- it takes an object infinitive.

Certus is the adjective from which the adverb certe (Unit 9) is formed.

The spelling atque is used before vowels or consonants; ac before consonants only. Atque (ac) is used sparingly, to indicate that which the listener could not anticipate from the context.

Postquam 'after' takes a perfect where formal English prefers the pluperfect tense: postquam puerum vidit 'after he had seen the boy.'

The indefinite adjective (quidam, quaedam, quoddam) and the indefinite pronoun (quidam, quaedam, quiddam) are identical in declension save for the spelling of the neuter singular nominative/accusative. Both are formed from the relative pronoun/adjective, qui, quae, quod (Unit 10) by the addition of the suffix -dam.

Tamen 'nevertheless' seldom comes first in its clause.

Unit 13

66. Pluperfect Indicative Passive: All Four Conjugations

The pluperfect indicative passive, the past completed tense, is always translated with the auxiliaries 'had been.' It is compounded of the perfect passive participle and the imperfect tense of sum.

For example:

duco, ducere, dux!, ductus 'lead'

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ductus, -a, -um eram ('I had been led')	duct!, -ae, -a eramus ('we had been led')
2	ductus, -a, -um eras ('you had been led')	duct!, -ae, -a eratis ('you had been led')
3	ductus, -a, -um erat ('he/she/it had been led')	duct!, -ae, -a erant ('they had been led')

Note: The pluperfect tense—fueram, fueras, etc.—may be substituted for eram, eras, etc., with no difference in meaning.

67. Future-Perfect Indicative Passive: All Four Conjugations

The future-perfect indicative passive, the future completed tense, is always translated with the auxiliaries 'will have been.' It is compounded of the perfect passive participle and the future tense of sum.

For example:

audio, audire, audiui, auditus 'hear'

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
I	auditus, -a, -um ero ('I will have been heard')	audit!, -ae, -a erimus ('we will have been heard')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
2	auditus, -a, -um eris ('you will have been heard')	audit!, -ae, -a eritis ('you will have been heard')
3	auditus, -a, -um erit ('he/she/it will have been heard')	audit!, -ae, -a erunt ('they will have been heard')

Note: The future-perfect tense—fuerd, fueris, etc.—may be substituted for ero, eris, erit, etc., with no difference in meaning.

68. Ablative Absolute

The ablative absolute most often consists of a noun + a perfect passive participle in the ablative case (other less common forms will be seen later). As a subordinate construction, it occurs only as an addition to an independent clause (i.e., a complete sentence). But as its name "absolute" implies, it is not directly connected to either the subject or the object of the independent clause. [In the Vulgate, however, this rule is not always strictly observed.] Instead, it gives a circumstance which modifies the meaning of the sentence. The circumstance will vary: it may be temporal, concessive, causal, or conditional. Thus the ablative absolute serves as a substitute for an adverbial clause (see Section 41).

Since the precise circumstance intended by an ablative absolute depends on the context, the student should translate literally at first (using the formula 'with [noun] having been [participle]'), before trying other possibilities ('when, although, since, if'), which require a finite form of the verb in the English.

Cena praeparata, pueri in domum intraverunt.

'With dinner having been prepared, the boys entered the house.'

'When, since, etc., dinner had been prepared, . . .'

Note: Since this form of the ablative absolute uses a passive participle, all translations, however free, should retain the passive voice. As usual, the perfect participle denotes an action prior to the main verb.

69. Temporal Clauses

Adverbial clauses of a purely temporal nature have verbs in the indicative mood; as in English, introductory time-words are used, e.g., cum 'when, after,' ubi 'when, as soon as,' ut 'when, as.'

Cum (ubi, ut) Jesus surrexit, apostoli erant laeti.

'When Jesus arose, the apostles were joyful.'

70. Synopsis of a Verb

A synopsis of a verb is a chart showing at a glance the different inflectional forms which the verb may have, it is usually drawn up to show forms of a chosen person and number.

Filling out a synopsis is an invaluable aid to remembering the various forms of any given verb. At this stage you know the six tenses of the indicative mood in both the active and the passive. But to prevent them from slipping away, you should fix them in your mind by the following procedure: take any transitive verb (i.e., one with passive as well as active forms) and write its four principal parts; choose a person and number; then fill out the twelve possible forms of the verb in the chosen person and number. As other forms are learned, this exercise should be expanded to include them. [A complete synopsis form may be found at the end of the morphological appendix.]

for example : The second-person singular of voco, vocare, vocavi, vocatus 'call.' (Be sure to write out the English translation along with each form.)

The second-person singular of voco, vocare, vocavi, vocatus 'call.'

Vocabulary Notes

Cend, a denominative verb from cena (Unit 1), is intransitive, i.e., it does not take an object.

Addo and perdo are compounds of do 'give.'

Incarnd is formed from the noun caro, carnis, f. 'flesh' (Unit 19).

The prefix of immuto (im- = in-) is intensive (not negative or locative): muto I change- immuto I transform.'

Std 'stand' is sometimes the virtual equivalent of sum 'be': men-sae stant in aula 'the tables stand (= are) in the hall.'

The verb -do, -dere, -didi, -ditus 'put' occurs only in compounds: g., condo 'found- hide' and subdo 'put under.'

While the simple verb specid seldom occurs, it yields four important compounds: aspicio, circumspicid, despicio, and respicid.

Baptista is an agent noun borrowed from Greek.

Brachium 'arm' is also spelled with two c's- when so spelled, the -a- is short by nature (but now long by position: bracchium).

Galilaeus and Judaeus are the adjectives from which the nouns Galilaea (Unit 10) and Judaea (Unit 2) are derived.

Cum 'with' (Unit 1) and cum 'when, after' are homonyms. Since their uses are so different, which is meant is always clear: cum puero 'with the boy'- cum puer videt 'when the boy sees.' Cum 'when, after' is quite often used with the future or future-perfect indicative.

Dum, when it means 'while,' will often use the present, even if the main clause has a past tense: dum ambulat, cantavit 'while he walked, he sang.'

Unit 14

71. Third Declension Nouns: Masculine or Feminine

While nouns of the first declension have -ae and those of the second declension have -i in the genitive singular, nouns of the third declension have -is. The nominative singular form is so varied that it cannot be reduced to rule but must be learned as a vocabulary item.

To decline a masculine or feminine third declension noun, first derive the base by removing the ending -is from the genitive singular; then add the following endings:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	—	-es
Gen.	-is	-um
Dat.	-i	-ibus
Acc.	-em	-es
Abl.	-e	-ibus

- Notes:
- i. Since the dative singular (-i) and the genitive plural (-um) endings are identical with the spellings used in other cases in the second declension, the student is cautioned to identify the declension of a noun before attempting to determine its case.
 2. Although some endings in the plural are identically spelled, context will help to determine the intended case.

rex, regis, m. 'king'; base: reg-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	rex ('the king')	reges ('the kings')
Gen.	regis ('of the king')	regum ('of the kings')

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Dat.	regi ('for/to the king')	regibus ('for/to the kings')
Acc.	regem ('the king')	reges ('the kings')
Abl.	rege ('from/with/in/by the king')	regibus ('from/with/in/by the kings') mater, matris , f. 'mother'; base: matr-
Nom.	mater ('the mother')	matres ('the mothers')
Gen.	matris ('of the mother')	matrum ('of the mothers')
Dat.	matri ('for/to the mother')	matribus ('for/to the mothers')
Acc.	matrem ('the mother')	matres ('the mothers')
Abl.	matre ('from/with/in/by the mother')	matribus ('from/with/in/by the mothers')

72. Third Declension Nouns: Neuter

Neuter nouns of the third declension use the same endings employed by masculine and feminine third declension nouns, except that the accusative singular duplicates the nominative singular (learned as a vocabulary item) and the nominative and accusative plural both end in -a.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	—	-a
Gen.	-is	-um
Dat.	-k	-ibus
Acc.	—	-a
Abl.	-e	-ibus

corpus, corporis, n. 'body, corpse'; base: corpor-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	corpus ('the body')	corpora ('the bodies')
Gen.	corporis ('of the body')	corporum ('of the bodies')
Dat.	corpori ('for/to the body')	corporibus ('for/to the bodies')
Acc.	corpus ('the body')	corpora ('the bodies')
Abl.	corpore ('from/with/in/by the body')	corporibus ('from/with/in/by the bodies')

73. Genitive of Description

The genitive case of a noun, often accompanied by an adjective, is used to describe or explain another noun in the same phrase.

Sumus populus misericordiael

'Are we a people of mercy?'

Prim! Christian! erant homines laeti animi.

'The first Christians were persons of joyful mind.'

[homo, hominis, m. 'human being, person']

74. Ablative of Description

The ablative case of a noun, always accompanied by an adjective, is used to describe a person or thing.

Petrus erat vir magnd anima.

'Peter was a man of great soul.'

75. Subjective and Objective Genitive

The genitive case may be used subjectively when it names the subject of the action denoted by the noun to which it is connected. Likewise, the genitive may be used objectively when it names the object of the action denoted by the noun to which it is attached.

Propter Dei misericordiam hominum gratias agimus.

'We give thanks on account of God's pity toward human beings.'

Here Dei is a subjective genitive because it denotes the one pitying, and hominum is an objective genitive because it denotes the ones receiving the pity.

76. Dative of Reference: Advantage or Disadvantage

The dative case may be used to refer to the interested or affected party of an action. Depending on whether the party benefits or suffers from the action, this use of the dative is called one of advantage or disadvantage.

Quae mala meo populo fecistis?

'What evils have you done to my people?'

Christus omnibus hominibus surrexit.
 'Christ has risen for all human beings.'

77. Apposition

A noun may be used to explain another noun- both nouns have the same case and the same syntactical relationship to the rest of the sentence.

Deum, nostrum Patrem, laudamus.

'We praise God, our Father.'

[pater, patris, m. 'father']

Here Deum is an accusative, the direct object, and Patrem is an accusative, in apposition to Deum.

78. Concessive Clauses

Adverbial clauses of concession (see Section 41) have verbs in the indicative mood when introduced by such sign-words as etsi 'although, even if' (Unit 13) and quamquam 'although.'

Quamquam (etsi) sumus indigni, Deus tamen cunctos diligit.

'Although we are unworthy, nevertheless God loves (us) all.'

Vocabulary Notes

Lego means both 'choose, select' and 'read,' since to read means to pick out words on a page—no easy task for the ancients, since the ideas of punctuation and spaces between words were late in coming. Note that the compounds diligo and intellego (Unit 31) have -x- (not -g-) in the third principal part: dilexi; intellexi.

Suscipio means 'take up (from below).' A Roman father acknowledged a newborn child as his own by picking it up; ecclesiastical Latin often uses this verb of God the Father taking up (and therefore acknowledging) our earnest prayers.

Joannes 'John' may also be spelled with an -h-: Johannes.

Rex 'king' is related to rego 'rule' (Unit 8).

Deprecatid 'supplication' and dratio 'prayer' are nouns formed from perfect participles—from deprecor 'beseech' (Unit 20) and ord 'pray' (Unit 5)—and the abstract-noun-making suffix -id, -ionis.

Baptisma, like baptista (Unit 13), is taken from the Greek.

Unit 15

79. Third Declension Nouns: Masculine or Feminine i-Stems

Some masculine and feminine nouns of the third declension belong to a subgroup called i-stem nouns. These nouns have -ium for the genitive plural ending.

MASCULINE AND FEMININE I-STEM NOUNS:

either have stems which end in two consonants, e.g., pars, partis, f. 'part'; stem: part- (but this is not the case if the second is l or r, e.g., mater, matris, f. 'mother'; stem: matr-), or are parasyllabic (i.e., have an equal number of syllables) in the nominative and genitive singulars.

These nouns will be indicated in the vocabulary lists by the addition of the genitive plural, the one differing form: panis, panis, panium, m. 'bread'; pars, partis, partium, f. 'part.'

80. Third Declension Nouns: Neuter i-Stems

A small number of neuter nouns of the third declension are members of the i-stem subgroup. Like masculine and feminine i-stems, they have -ium in the genitive plural, but they also have -i (instead of -e) in the ablative singular and -ia in the nominative and accusative plural (instead of -a). Most neuter i-stems have nominatives in -e, -ar, or -al.

These neuter nouns will likewise be indicated in the vocabulary lists as i-stem nouns by the addition of the genitive plural: mare, maris, marium, n. 'sea.'

81. Partitive Genitive

The genitive case may be used to indicate the whole after a word denoting a part.

Petrus multos discipulorum in templum duxit.

'Peter led many of the disciples into the temple.'

82. Dative with Certain Adjectives

The dative case may depend on an adjective meaning 'near to/' 'fit for,' 'pleasing to,' 'dear to,' or the like.

Nostrum sacrificium erit Deo gratum?

'Will our sacrifice be pleasing to God.'

83. Predicate Accusative

English has a construction called the objective complement in which a noun or adjective is used to complete the meaning of a noun or pronoun: 'we named him president of the club.' Latin has a similar usage called the predicate accusative, after such verbs as faciō and habed. (See Section 7.5.)

Christus Jesus Petrum apostolum fecit.

'Christ Jesus made Peter his apostle.'

Ecclesiam habemus sdnctam.

'We consider the church holy.'

84. Cognate Accusative

An accusative related in meaning to the verb which governs it is called a cognate accusative. 'To dream a dream' or 'to run a race' illustrates this construction in English.

Vitam bonam vixit.

'He lived a good life.'

With the addition of the adjective, this brief sentence amounts to a transformation of bene vixit 'he lived well.'

Vocabulary Notes

Ambo 'lectern' is derived from the Greek.

Cruor specifically means 'blood' as it flows from a wound. Cf. English 'gore.' The more general sanguis 'blood' is the one more often used of Jesus and the shedding of his blood.

Particeps is a compound of pars 'part' and capid 'take' (Unit 6).

Lector 'reader' and lectio 'reading' are formed from lego 'read' (Unit 14).

Resurrectid 'rising again' is taken from resurgo (Unit 12).

Note that salus has three important interrelated meanings: safety, health, salvation.

Salvus + facere means 'make safe, i.e., save': Jesus populum salvum fecit 'Jesus has saved the people.'

Depending on the usage, satis may function as a noun, an adjective, or an adverb: habemus satis cibi 'we have enough food'; panes sunt satis 'the loaves are enough'; Deum satis laudamus? 'do we praise God enough?'

Unit 16

85. Third Declension Adjectives

While some adjectives use the endings of the first and second declensions, others use the endings of the third declension only. This second type has three classes, depending on whether the nominative singular has one, two, or three separate forms.

Third declension adjectives are declined like i-stem nouns: in the ablative singular all three genders have -ī; in the genitive plural all three genders have -īum, in the nominative and accusative plural the neuter has -ia.

a. Three Endings in the Nominative Singular Since third declension nouns have two related sets of endings—a neuter and a non-neuter (i.e., masculine/feminine)—it is surprising to find that a small number of third declension adjectives have added a third ending in one case, the masculine nominative singular. The stem for these adjectives is found by dropping the -is ending from the feminine nominative singular. All three nominative forms will be listed in the vocabulary.

acer, acris, acre 'sharp, bitter, ardent'; base: acr-

b. Two Endings in the Nominative Singular Adjectives with two nominative singular forms—i.e., a masculine/feminine and a neuter—are the most common class of third declension adjectives. Both nominative forms are listed in the vocabulary. The stem is derived by dropping the -is ending from the masculine/feminine nominative singular.

omnis, omne 'every, all'; base: omn-

c. One Ending in the Nominative Singular Adjectives with one form in the nominative singular for all three genders are listed in the vocabulary with the genitive singular form. The base of these adjectives is derived by dropping the ending -is from the genitive singular.

felix [gen., felicis] 'happy, blessed'; base: felic-

86. Present Active Participles

Participles may be viewed as verbal adjectives (see Section 80.2; cf. 65). Though built from verbs, they may modify a noun. For example, in the expressions 'glowing coals' and 'home-grown tomatoes' glowing and grown, derived from verbs, are used as adjectives. Present active participles in Latin are declined like third declension adjectives of one ending. These participles are formed by adding to the present stem of a verb the suffix -ns to form the nominative singular, and -nt- to form the base of the participle; to this base are added the endings of the third declension.

first conjugation :

lauda- + -ns = laudans 'praising'
lands- + -nt- + -is = laudantis

SECOND conjugation	:	mone- + -ns = monens 'warning' mone- + -nt- + -is = monentis
THIRD CONJUGATION, '-O' type :		duce- + -ns = ducens 'leading' duce- + -nt- + -is = ducentis
THIRD CONJUGATION, '-id' type :		capie- + -ns = capiens 'taking' capie- + -nt- + -is = capienis
fourth conjugation	:	audie- + -ns = audiens 'hearing' audie- + -nt- + -is = audientis

- Notes: 1. The -io' verbs (third and fourth conjugation) have -ie- before the participial suffixes.
2. The ablative singular ending of the present active participle is usually -e (occasionally -i).

87. Uses of the Present Active Participle

Present active participles are used in three ways:

a. Adjectival These participles may modify nouns. Just as in English, they may either come with the noun or follow it, set off by commas. For example, in English, 'the struggling artist' and 'the artist, struggling to succeed, etc.,' are both regular uses of the participle as adjective.

Cldmans vir a Jesu auditus est.

'The shouting man was heard by Jesus.'

Vir, damans, a Jesu auditus est.

'The man, shouting, was heard by Jesus.'

Note: This second illustration may be translated with an English relative clause, since such a construction has adjectival force. Thus, 'The mans,) who was shouting[.] was heard by Jesus.' Any present participle, when translated as a clause, is given a tense contemporaneous with the main verb.

b. Adverbial These participles may be used to take the place of various adverbial (therefore, subordinate) clauses of time, cause, concession, and purpose (see Section 41).

Vir, damans, tamen a Jesu non auditus est.

'The man, although he was shouting, nevertheless was not heard by Jesus.'

- Notes:*
1. The example is a present participle illustrating its use as an adverbial clause of concession,- here tamen is the clue to the concessive idea.
 2. As usual, when the present participle is translated as a clause, it is given a tense which is contemporaneous with the main verb.

c. Ablative Absolute Present participles, as well as perfect passive participles, may be used in the ablative absolute construction (see Section 68).

Petro in domum intrante*, Paulus restitit.

'With Peter entering . . . '

'When Peter entered the house, Paul remained behind.'

Petro in domum intrante*, Paulus restat.

'With Peter entering . . . '

'When Peter enters the house, Paul remains behind.'

Note again that the present participle denotes an action contemporaneous with the main verb.

88. Fourth Declension Nouns: Masculine (or Feminine)

Nouns of the fourth declension have -us in the genitive singular. Masculine (or feminine) nouns have -us in the nominative singular. Their endings, singular and plural, are the following:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	-us	-US
Gen.	-US	-uum
Dat.	-ui	-ibus
Acc.	•um	-us
Abl.	-u	-ibus

- Notes:*
1. The nominative and accusative singular are the same as those of the second declension masculine.
 2. The dative and ablative plural are the same as those of the third declension.

ritus, ritus, m. 'ceremony, rite'; base: rit-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	ritus ('the rite')	ritus ('the rites')

Acc.	ritum ('the rite')	ritus ('the rites')
Abl.	ritu j'from/with/in/by the rite')	ritibus ('from/with/in/by the rites')

89. Fourth Declension Nouns: Neuter

Neuter nouns of the fourth declension have -u in the nominative and accusative singular, -u in the dative singular, and -ua in the nominative and accusative plural.

genu, genus, n. 'knee'; base: gen-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL

Vocabulary Notes

In some ancient texts the verb genuflecto is written as two words. In that event genu is to be construed as the direct object of flecto.

In the passive voice confundo means 'be ashamed of' and takes the accusative case. This use imitates the Greek middle voice, which may take an accusative, just as the active voice does: Petrus Paulum confundebatur 'Peter was ashamed of Paul.'

Besides as terms for 'coming down from or going up' to heaven, ascendo and descendo are also used of 'going to or coming from' the big city (on high ground) or 'getting in or out' of a boat.

Note that caritas is an abstract noun formed from the base of the adjective carus (Unit 7) + the noun-making suffix -itas, -itatis. The early Christians chose this word for 'love,' to avoid the unwanted connotations attaching to others, such as amor.

Pascha, Paschatis, n. and Pascha, Paschae, f. (Unit 11) are identical in origin and meaning. These words are heteroclites (i.e., words identical in base which use the endings of two different declensions).

Note that manus is a feminine noun. To remember this, recall that dextera 'right hand' (Unit 13) is feminine: dextera (manus). Most other non-neuter words of the fourth declension are masculine.

Memor takes the genitive case. In general, words meaning 'forgetting or remembering' take this case.

Omnipotens is a compound of two third-declension adjectives, omnis and potens (Unit 20).

Note that salutaris is an adjective built on the noun salus, salutis, f. (Unit 15). The suffix -arts, -e means 'pertaining to.'

Similis and dissimilis are two more adjectives which take the dative case (see Section 82) (occasionally the genitive occurs).

Unit 17

90. The Irregular Verb void 'wish': All Six Indicative Tenses

Since a verb is assigned to a conjugation according to the form of its second principal part, a glance at the present infinitive of void, velle, volui, — 'wish, want, be willing' shows that it is irregular: velle.

The forms of the present indicative cannot be synthesized from the stem of its present infinitive; the forms must be observed and memorized.

PRESENT INDICATIVE

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	void ('I wish')	volumus ('we wish')
2	vis ('you wish')	vultis ('you wish')
3	vult ('he/she/it wishes')	volunt ('they wish')

The imperfect and future indicative tenses are formed as if from a regular third conjugation verb with the infinitive volere. Once this is known, the forms are easily generated. Thus, the imperfect indicative: volebam, volebas, etc.; the future indicative: volam, voles, volet, etc. (See Sections 39 and 47.)

In the perfect-active system void is entirely regular: the perfect, pluperfect, and future-perfect are formed in the regular way from the stem of the third principal part. Thus, the perfect: volui, voluisti, etc.; the pluperfect: volueram, volueras, etc.; the future-perfect: voluero, volueris, etc.

91. The Irregular Verb ed 'go': All Six Indicative Tenses

Although at first glance the present infinitive of ed, ire, ivi (ii), itus 'go' appears to place it among fourth conjugation verbs, it is irregular; the present indicative must be observed and memorized.

PRESENT INDICATIVE

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	eo ('I go')	Imus ('we go')
2	is ('you go')	itis ('you go')
3	it ('he/she/it goes')	eunt ('they go')

Note: The monosyllabic forms is and it, when uncompounded, are rare; other verbs, such as ambuld (Unit 5) and vadd (Unit 24), supply substitutes for these two forms.

The imperfect indicative is formed from the stem I- (very rarely ie-). Thus ibam, ibas, ibat, etc. (Compare the formation in a regular fourth conjugation verb—audiebam, audiebas, etc.—where -e- is always added to the present stem.) The future indicative also uses this stem (i-), but employs the future suffix -bi-, like a first or second conjugation verb.

IMPERFECT INDICATIVE

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ibam ('I was going')	ibamus ('we were going')
2	ibas ('you were going')	ibatis ('you were going')
3	ibat ('he/she/it was going')	ibant ('they were going')

FUTURE INDICATIVE

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	ibo ('I will go')	ibimus ('we will go')
2	ibis ('you will go')	ibitis ('you will go')
3	ibit ('he/she/it will go')	ibunt ('they will go')

Like any verb, eo has a regular perfect-active system. Either form of the third principal part—ivi or ii—yields the perfect, pluperfect, and future-perfect tenses in accordance with the rules. When the shorter stem is used, the second-person forms of the perfect are contracted: iisti > isti; iistis > istis.

92. Accusative of Place to/into Which

The accusative case is used with the prepositions ad or in to express motion toward or into a place. The preposition may be omitted with domus 'house' or with the names of big cities.

Et veniunt ad domum. Mk. iii, 20.

'And they come to the house.'

Petrus introiit (in) domum.

'Peter entered (into) the house.'

[introeo, introire, introivi (introii), introitus 'go within, enter']

Petrus ivit (in) Rbmam (Hierosolymam).

'Peter went to Rome (to Jerusalem).'

[Roma, Rdmae, f. 'Rome'; Hierosolyma, Hierosolymae, f. 'Jerusalem']

93. Ablative of Place Where

The ablative case is used with the preposition in to express the place in which something happens.

Apostoli in cendculd convenerant.

'The apostles had come together in the upper room.'

94. Ablative of Place from Which/out of Which

The ablative case is used with the prepositions a (ab, abs) and e (ex) to express motion away from or out of a place.

Paulus venit a Roma (ab Hierosolymis).

'Paul came from Rome (from Jerusalem).'

Petrus venit e templo.

'Peter came out of the temple.'

95. Locative Case

The concept of place where, when applied to big cities, may be expressed by the locative case. Nouns of the first and second declensions use an ending which is identical with the genitive singular. Nouns occurring only in the plural use an ending which is identical with the ablative plural.

Rdmae.

'At Rome.'

Ephesi.

'At Ephesus.'

[Ephesus, Ephesi, m. 'Ephesus']

Athenis.

'At Athens.'

[Athenae, Athenarum, f. 'Athens']Hierosolymis.

'At Jerusalem.'

Note: When the indeclinable noun Jerusalem occurs, the preposition is always expressed: in Jerusalem 'in Jerusalem.'

Vocabulary Notes

When admitto means 'allow, permit' it takes an object infinitive. Amitto may indicate either intentional or accidental action, 'send off' or 'lose.'

The present participle of eo is iens (gen., euntis). The m in circumeo may be dropped: circueo, circuire, circuivi (circuit), circuitus. Note that some compounds of eo—intered; obed- pereo—are employed euphemistically to mean 'die.' The d in proded and reded is epenthetical, i.e., inserted to make the words easier to say. Besides 'to go under' subed may also mean 'climb' in the sense of 'to go up from under.' (Cf. suscipio, Unit 14.)

As the infinitive shows, prosum uses an epenthetical d when the form of sum begins with a vowel: prodes; proderO, etc.

The present participle of void is volens (gen., volentis). Volo may take a direct object or an object infinitive: Visne panem? 'Do you want the bread?' Volo meum filium videre. 'I wish to see my son.'

Vetus 'old' is the antonym of 'new,' not the antonym of 'young': vetus testamentum 'old testament'; novum testamentum 'new testament.'

Note that the Latin for 'Jerusalem' falls into three classes: indeclinable noun, first declension noun, and second declension plural noun. The concept of place to which often uses the accusative of the first declension form: Hierosolymam; place where uses either the locative of the second declension plural form, Hierosolymis, or the preposition with the indeclinable form, in Jerusalem.

Unit 18

96. Future Active Participle

Besides the present active and the perfect passive, Latin has future participles of both voices. To form the future active participle, simply insert the suffix -ur- between the base of the perfect passive participle and the ending:

laudat- + -ur-: laudaturus, -a, -um monit- + -ur-: moniturus, -a, -um duct- + -ur-: ducturus, -a, -um capt- + -ur-: capturus, -a, -um audit- + -ur-: auditurus, -a, -um

Since these participles refer to a time subsequent to that of the main verb, they may be translated with the expressions 'intending to' or 'about to'; thus, 'intending to praise,' 'about to lead,' etc. Since they are active in form and meaning, these participles may take a direct object: laudaturus Deum 'about to praise God'; auditurus Orationem 'intending to hear the prayer.' Thus future participles often convey the idea of likelihood or purpose.

97. Future Passive Participle

To form the future passive participle, add -ndus, -nda, -ndum to the stem of the present infinitive; i-stem verbs will have -ie-:

lauda- + -nd-: laudandus, -a, -um mone- + -nd-: monendus, -a, -um duce- + -nd-: ducendus, -a, -um capie- + -nd-: capiendus, -a, -um audio- + -nd-: audiendus, -a, -um

Note that all stem vowels are short before -nd-. These participles may be translated with the phrases 'about to be,' 'having to be.' Future passive participles often convey the added notion of duty, propriety, or necessity—an action which 'has to be done' or 'should be done.'

98. Periphrastic Conjugations

While the future active and passive participles are verbal adjectives and may be used as such, they are most often joined with the verb sum to form compound tenses which are the grammatical equivalents of the regular tenses. These compound tenses are called periphrastics. As in all compound tenses, the endings are restricted to the nominative (-us, -a, -urn- -I, -ae, -a) since they always refer back to the subject, whether it is expressed or implied.

a. Active Periphrastic The active periphrastic conjugation is compounded of the future active participle in the nominative case and sum in the required tense.

- Present: laudaturus sum. 'I am going to praise.'
 Imperfect: laudaturus eram. 'I was intending to praise.'
 Pluperfect: laudaturus fueram. 'I had been about to praise.'
 etc.

Note that the participle determines only the voice of the compound verb form; the form of sum determines the person, number, tense, and mood.

b. Passive Periphrastic The passive periphrastic conjugation is composed of the future passive participle in the nominative case and sum in the required tense.

- Present: audiendus est. 'he is having to be heard.'
 'he must be heard.'
 Future: audienda erit. 'she will have to be heard.'
 etc.

Note, again, that the form of the participle determines only the voice.

Care should be taken to distinguish these periphrastics from the three regular compound tenses: e.g., audit! sunt 'they were heard/have been heard,' but audituri sunt 'they are about to hear,' audiend! sunt 'they should/must/ought to be heard,' etc.

99. Dative of Personal Agency with Passive Periphrastics

Since the dative is the case of the interested party, passive periphrastics quite logically use this case to indicate the one on whom the obligation or necessity of the action rests- this is called the dative of personal agency.

Psalmus populo cantandus est.

'A psalm is having to be chanted by the people.'

'A psalm must be chanted by the people.'

Paulus regi audiendus erat.

'Paul was having to be heard by the king.'

'Paul had to be heard by the king.'

Note: The dative of personal agency is occasionally found even with the regular compound tenses, in imitation of the Greek practice with perfect or pluperfect passives: nihil dignum morte actum est ei (Lk. xxiii, 15) 'nothing worthy of death has been done by him.'

100. Review of Participles

Theoretically, since there are two voices and three tenses, Latin should have six participles. But in practice it lacks two, a present passive and a perfect active.

Participles, when used as adjectives, express relative time- i.e., they indicate a time relative to that of the action of the main verb. The present participle expresses a time simultaneous with that of the main verb- the perfect, either a time prior to or simultaneous with that of the main verb (since the perfect is both the past simple and the present perfect); and the future, a time subsequent to that of the main verb.

	ACTIVE	PASSIVE
Present:	laudans (gen. , laudantis) ('praising')	None
Perfect:	None	laudatus, -a, -um ('having been praised')
Future:	laudaturus, -a, -um ('about to praise, 'intending to praise')	laudandus, -a, -um ('having to be praised')

Latin makes up for these missing participles by inverting the voice or by using a finite verb. For example, the active idea, 'having seen the apostle,' may easily be inverted and thus expressed: apostold vise 'the apostle having been seen'; or it may be expressed in an adverbial clause by a finite verb introduced by a subordinating conjunction: postquam apostolum vidit 'after he had seen the apostle.'

Vocabulary Notes

The z in baptizo and evangelizo is a rare letter in Latin, occurring only in words borrowed from Greek. Since it has the value of two consonants (see Section ic, Note 4), the z in these words causes the preceding i to get the accent: baptizo, evangelizo. When evangelizo takes a direct object, translate 'announce the good news of.'

The basic meaning of cedd is 'to go'; when it means 'yield to' or 'give in to' it takes the dative. All its many compounds expand on the idea of 'to go,' with the exception of concede 'yield; grant.'

When the preposition ob (Unit 11) is used as a prefix, it means 'out in front of'; ostendo is a compound of tendo and obs (a by-form of ob) with the b dropped: 'stretch' (something) 'out in front of' (someone); hence, 'show,- explain.' Consequently, ostendo may take a direct and an indirect object.

Note that the noun dementia is built from the base of clemens {gen., dementis) (Unit 17) + the abstract-noun-making suffix, -ia.

Tenebrae occurs only in the plural; translate in the singular: 'darkness, gloom.'

Grex, gregis, m. 'flock' is the source of the denominative verb grego (Unit 11).

Ascensid is formed from the perfect passive participle of ascendo (Unit 16): ascens- + -id (-ionis).

Humanitas is the abstract noun made from the adjective humanus (Unit 15): human- + -itas (-itatis).

Altare is the neuter of an adjective used substantively; it is ultimately derived from the simpler adjective altus (Unit 9).

The noun festum (Unit 3) is the adjective festus used as a substantive.

The adjective indeficiens is a post-classical coinage from the present participle of deficid (Unit 6). The prefix in- is here the inseparable particle meaning 'without, not.'

Unit 19

101, Fifth Declension Nouns

Nouns of the fifth declension have -ei in the genitive singular. With few exceptions, this is a feminine declension. The endings, singular and plural, are the following:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	-es	-es
Gen.	-ei (-ei)	-erum
Oat.	-ei (-ei)	-ebus
Acc.	-em	-es
Abl.	-e	-ebus

- Notes:*
1. Each ending begins with the letter e.
 2. The alternate genitive and dative singular endings are used when the base of the noun ends in a vowel:
dies, diei, m. & f. 'day.'

res, rei, f. 'thing'; base: r-

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	res ('the thing')	res ('the things')
Gen.	rei ('of the thing')	rerum ('of the things')
Oat.	rei ('for/to the thing')	rebus ('for/to the things')
Acc.	rem ('the thing')	res ('the things')
Abl.	re ('from/with/in/by the thing')	rebus ('from/with/in/by the things')

102. Direct Commands (or Requests) (1): Imperative Mood

The third kind of sentence, the direct command (or request) (see Section 7), is expressed by the imperative mood. The tense of an imperative is present; its forms are restricted to the second person.

a. Present Imperative Active: All Four Conjugations The second-person singular present imperative active is identical with the present stem. The plural is formed by adding -te; the stem vowel of third conjugation verbs shifts from -e- to -i- before -te.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
2	lauda! 'praise!'	laudate! 'praise!'
2	mone! 'warn!'	monete! 'warn!'
2	*duce! 'lead!'	ducite! 'lead!'
2	cape! 'take!'	capite! 'take!'
2	audf! 'hear!'	audite! 'hear!'

- Notes:*
1. Duce always occurs without the stem vowel—due.
 2. There is a little-used future tense in the imperative mood. The monosyllabic sci—from scid (Unit 9)—is often replaced by a future form—scito—with little or no difference in meaning.
 3. The imperative forms of sum are es and este. The singular is often replaced by a future form—esto; the plural may be replaced by a future form—estote. In either event there is little difference in meaning.
 4. The imperatives of ed 'go' are ! and ite; I is not used unless compounded: exi, adi, etc.
 5. There are no imperatives of volo 'wish' or possum 'be able.'

b. Present Imperative Passive: All Four Conjugations The second-person present imperative passive is identical with the second-person present indicative passive in both numbers; in the singular, the shorter ending only is used: -re.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
2	laudare! 'be praised!'	laudamini! 'be praised!'
2	monere! 'be warned!'	monemini! 'be warned!'
2	ducere! 'be led!'	ducimini! 'be led!'
2	capere! 'be taken!'	capimini! 'be taken!'
2	audire! 'be heard!'	audimini! 'be heard!'

- Notes:* 1. The singular form is spelled like the present infinitive active.
 2. Context will help to distinguish these passive imperatives from infinitives and indicative forms.

103. Vocative Case

Direct address (of a person, place, or thing) is conveyed by the vocative case. Both nouns and adjectives have vocatives. All forms, both singular and plural, are identical with the nominative, except for second declension masculine nouns in the singular, where the ending is -e.

O bona mater! 'O good mother!'

O felices reges! 'O happy kings!'

Domine universi! 'Lord of the universe!'

Care apostole! 'O beloved apostle!'

The major exceptions are these:

1. Second declension nouns in -ius drop the -us ending and lengthen the -i- of the stem.
2. Second declension nouns in -ir or -er use the nominative case.
3. The vocative of meus (-a, -um) is either meus or mi.
4. Deus and agnus use the nominative case.
5. The vocative of Jesus is Jesu.

Jesu, fili Patris! 'O Jesus, son of the Father!'

Magister mi! 'O my master!'

Deus meus! 'O my God!'

Agnus Dei! 'Lamb of God!'

104. Personal Pronouns

Latin has pronouns of the first and second persons to express the speaker and the person addressed. Because these forms are irregular, they must be carefully observed and memorized. The nominatives are always emphatic (since the verb ending already indicates the person intended).

a. First-Person Pronoun

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	ego (T)	nos ('we')
Gen.	mei ('of me')	nostri) ¹ of us"; nostrum]
Dat.	mihi ('for/to me')	nobis ('for/to us')
Acc.	me ('me')	nos ('us')
Abl.	me ('from/with/in/by me')	nobis ('from/with/in/by us')

- Notes: 1. The preposition cum is appended to the ablatives: mecum 'with me'; nobiscum 'with us.'
1. Nostri is used for the objective genitive (see Section 75): Dei dilectid nostri 'God's love of us'; nostrum is used for the partitive (see Section 81): multi nostrum 'many of us.'

b. Second-Person Pronoun

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
Nom.	tu ('you')	vos ('you')
Gen.	tui ('of you')	vestri l „ r vestrum J
Dat.	tibi ('for/to you')	vobis ('for/to you')
Acc.	te ('you')	vos ('you')
Abl.	te ('from/with/in/by you')	vobis ('from/with/in/by you')

- Notes:* 1. Here, too, the preposition cum, when used, is appended to the ablative forms: tecum 'with you',-vdbiscum 'with you.'
2. Vestri is used like nostri, vestrum like nostrum: Dei dilectio vestri 'God's love of you'- multi vestrum 'many of you.' Note that both forms have -e- all other plurals, -d-

105. Double Accusative

A small number of verbs meaning 'ask (for)' or 'teach' take a double object, an accusative of the thing and an accusative of the person.

Diaconus puerds Evangelium docebat.

'The deacon used to teach the boys the Gospel.'

[doced, docere, docui, doctus 'teach']

Vocabulary Notes

Like many first conjugation verbs, euro, desiderd, and vulnero are denominatives—from cura (Unit 22), desiderium (Unit 10), and vulnus, vulneris, n. 'wound' (not formally presented).

Desiderd may take a direct object or an object infinitive: desiderd panem 'I desire bread'; desiderd videre Petrum 'I desire to see Peter.'

Doceo, besides taking a double accusative of person and thing, may also take a double object of person and infinitive: docebat puerum legere 'he was teaching the boy (how) to read.'

Prater 'brother' is a code-word for 'fellow-Christian.'

The verb incarnd (Unit 13) is derived from card, carnis, f. 'flesh.'

Mulier means 'woman' or 'wife,' much as vir (Unit 3) means 'man' or 'husband.'

Though usually masculine and thus exceptional in the fifth declension, dies is feminine when a specific day is meant. Note that since the base ends in a vowel the lengthened genitive and dative endings are used—die! and die!.

Fides and fidelis both combine the meanings of 'belief' and 'loyalty to one's beliefs.'

Res is nearly as variable in meaning as English 'thing'; it acquires its specific meaning from the context. Some of its more frequent significations are these: matters, affairs, circumstances, property, reality, the state.

The nominatives ego and tu are emphatic forms, best translated verbally by tone of voice or in writing by italics: I, you.

Unit 20

106. Deponent Verbs

Deponent verbs have passive forms, but active meanings. Conversely stated, these verbs have no active forms and no passive meanings. They occur in all four conjugations:

- r: miror, mirari, —, miratus sum 'wonder (at)'
- 2: misereor, misereri, —, misertus sum 'have pity (on)'
- 3: nascor, nasci, —, natus sum 'be born'
- pator, pati!, —, passus sum 'suffer'
- 4: orior, oriri, —, ortus sum 'spring up, arise'

- Notes:*
- 1. Deponent verbs have only three principal parts, since there is no perfect active form.
 - 2. Like other verbs, deponents are classified according to the form of the second principal part, the present infinitive. These end in -ar! in the first conjugation, -er! in the second, -! in the third (whether -6' type or -id' type), and -Ir! in the fourth.
 - 3. The last principal part is conventionally given with sum, showing the perfect indicative form. Without sum, this is of course the perfect participle, which has an active meaning.
 - 4. Exceptions in Voice.
 - a. Deponents have present participles; these of course are active in form as well as in meaning: mirans [gen., mirantis] 'wondering (at),' etc.
 - b. Deponents have both future participles: mira-tuius 'about to wonder (at),' mirandus 'having to be wondered at.'

Dominus miseretur nobis.

'The Lord has pity on us.'

Jesus propter peccata nostra passus est.

'Jesus suffered on account of our sins.'

107. Semi-Deponent Verbs

A very small number of verbs are deponent in their perfect system only. They have active and passive forms and meanings in the present-stem system, but only passive forms with active meanings in the tenses formed from the perfect participle.

2: auded, audere; —, ausus sum 'dare'

2: gauded, gaudere; —, gavisus sum 'rejoice'

3: cdnfido, confidere; —, confisus sum 'trust'

Audemus ad Patrem orare.

'We dare to pray to the Father.'

Ausi sumus ad Patrem orare.

'We dared to pray to the Father.'

108. Subjunctive Mood: An Overview

The subjunctive is the mood of contingency or hypothetical action. It expresses what may happen or might have happened. Although it is mostly used in a variety of subordinate clauses, the subjunctive may also be employed independently to express certain forms of statements, commands, and questions. English makes very little use of its own subjunctive mood ('till death do us part,' 'thy kingdom come,' 'if I were king,' etc.), preferring instead to employ a number of auxiliary verbs: 'should, would, may, might, could.' Depending on the precise construction, the Latin subjunctive may be translated with the aid of one or another of these English auxiliaries. Until the various uses of the subjunctive are quite clear, the student is advised to translate with the precise translation formula given for each construction.

There are only four tenses of the subjunctive mood: present, perfect; imperfect, pluperfect. The subjunctive has no need of a future or a future-perfect tense; the mood itself (especially in its present and imperfect tenses) conveys the notion of what may or might be possible. The negative, for the most part, is ne (although in certain clear cases non is used, just as in the indicative). A subjunctive clause may be introduced by a sign-word, such as utinam or ut.

109. Present Subjunctive: First Conjugation

The sign of the present subjunctive in the first conjugation is the letter -e-; it replaces the stem vowel -a-.

No translation is presented in subjunctive paradigms, since the exact meaning, often supplemented by English auxiliaries, is determined by the use.

a. Active All active forms of the subjunctive mood for the first conjugation are compounded of the present stem in -e- and the active personal endings; the alternate -m is used in the first-person singular.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	laudem	laudemus
2	laudes	laudetis
3	laudet	laudent

- Notes:*
1. Long -e- is shortened before -m, -t, and -nt.
 2. Since first-conjugation present subjunctives look like second-conjugation present indicative forms (cf. monemus), the student is advised to determine the conjugation before analyzing any verb-form.

b. Passive The passive forms use the passive personal endings. The -e- appears throughout.

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	lauder	laudemur
2	lauderis, laudere	laudemini
3	laudetur	laudentur

- Notes:*
1. Long -e- is shortened before -r and -ntur.
 2. As in the indicative, the second-person singular uses both alternate forms.

110. Direct Commands (or Requests) (2)

Besides the imperative mood (see Section 102), certain subjunctive and indicative constructions may also express direct commands (or requests).

a. Hortatory Subjunctive When rousing or exhorting oneself and others to possible action, the speaker may use the first-person plural of the present subjunctive.

Translation formula: 'Let us . . .'

Cantemus Domino canticum novum!

'Let us sing to the Lord a new song!'

Baptizemur a Joanne!

'Let us be baptized by John!'

Note: Occasionally the first-person singular is found: cantem
'let me sing.'

b. Optative Subjunctive Attainable wishes (in the present or for the future) may be expressed by the present subjunctive. Occasionally this optative use of the subjunctive is introduced by the sign-word utinam.

Translation formula: 'Would that . . may . . .' or 'May . . .'

Dominum semper glorificem!

'Would that I may always glorify the Lord!'

'May I always glorify the Lord!'

Mutes tuds modes!

'Would that you may change your ways!'

'May you change your ways!'

Utinam Aegyptii fugentur!

'Would that the Egyptians may be put to flight!'

'May the Egyptians be put to flight!'

c. Jussive Future Indicative The future indicative may be used for commands which are binding for an indefinite period of time- they are to be heeded both now and in the future. Like the imperative mood, this jussive use of the future indicative occurs only in the second person.

Translation formula: 'You shall.

Diliges proximum tuum.

'You shall love your neighbor.'

111. How to Answer Syntax Questions (2)

Thus far, syntax questions have inquired about nouns and adjectives only; these have focused on the case and the reason for the case (see Section 19). Now that the subjunctive mood—with its four tenses and its many uses—is being introduced, from now on syntax questions will also include verbs. Such questions will concentrate on two of the five facts about each finite verb-form, the tense and the mood, and ask the reasons for the tense and the mood. They help to focus the student's attention on the inalterable fact that precise syntactical analysis must always precede any attempt at translation.

Vocabulary Notes

Miror is a denominative verb from the adjective mirus (Unit 8); it is used both transitively and intransitively.

Peccatum (Unit 3) is a noun made from the perfect passive participle of pecco. Peccator is the agent noun formed from pecco.

Precor is a denominative verb formed from prex (Unit 19). It takes an accusative of the person asked and an infinitive of the action requested: precor Mariam drare pro me 'I ask Mary to pray for me.'

Deprecor is an intensive form of precor, much as 'beseech' is an intensive form of 'seek.'

Auded may take an object, but more commonly it takes an object infinitive: audemus dicere 'we dare to say.' Be careful to distinguish this verb from audio, audire, audfvi, auditus 'hear.'

Gauded is often followed by an ablative of cause (see Section 58). The noun gaudium (Unit 3) is formed from the same root from which this verb is made.

Misereor is a second conjugation denominative verb built on miser. It takes a dative or a genitive: miserere nobis (nostri) 'have mercy on us.'

As with many verbs taking the dative, confido may instead be followed by a prepositional phrase (such as in Domino 'in the Lord').

The future participle active of mori is moriturus, -a, -urn its perfect participle is the source of the adjective mortuus (Unit 4).

Patior may take an object or an accusative and object infinitive:

Petrus patitur parvulos ad Jesum venire 'Peter allows the children to come to Jesus.' The noun passid (Unit 16) is derived from the perfect participle.

The future participle active of orior is oriturus, -a, -um; the third-person singular present indicative is oritur; the present active participle, oriens (gen., orientis), is often used substantively, 'east, orient.'

Memoria is an abstract noun formed from the adjective memor (Unit 16) and the noun-making suffix -ia, -iae, f.

Benedictid is composed of the base of the perfect passive participle of benedico (Unit 7) and the noun-making suffix -io, -ionis, f.

Potestas and potens often take an objective genitive: potens—in reality, the present participle of possum—may govern a complementary infinitive.

Opus means 'work, deed,' but when used with est it means 'there is a need.' It may take a referential dative + either an infinitive or an ablative (of means): opus est mihi librum legere 'there is a need to me to read a book, I must read a book'; opus est mihi pane 'there is a need to me by means of bread, I need bread.' Rarely, the nominative is found: panis est opus nobis 'bread is a need to us, we need bread.'

Paternus is an adjective built on pater (Unit 14).

Consubstantialis is a word coined by the Church (probably by the Carthaginian theologian, Tertullian, 160?-230?) to describe a crucial aspect of Trinitarian doctrine.

Nihil, or nil, is used as an indeclinable noun or as an adverb: nihil eg! 'I have done nothing';- verba Petri nihil audita sunt 'the words of Peter were not at all heard.'

Notice that veto 'indeed,' an adverb derived from the adjective verus (Unit 4), may also have an adversative force—'but indeed.' A postpositive, it occurs as the second or third word of its clause.

112. Present Subjunctive: Second, Third, and Fourth Conjugations

The letter -a- is the sign of the present subjunctive in the second, third, and fourth conjugations. In the second and fourth it is added to the present stem—monea-, audia-; in the third, it replaces the stem vowel (the '-id' type has -ia-J—duca-, capia-).

a. Active To form the present active subjunctive of these conjugations, add the active personal endings to the modified stem. The -a- is shortened before -m, -t, and -nt, as usual.

SECOND CONJUGATION:

	SINGULAR	PLURAL
1	moneam	moneamus
2	moneas	moneatis
3	moneat	moneant

Note: The stem mone- becomes mone- in all forms, under the rule that a long vowel is shortened when followed by another vowel (see Section ia.5).

		SINGULAR	PLURAL
THIRD CONJUGATION, -O' TYPE:	1	ducam	ducamus
	2	ducas	ducatis
	3	ducat	ducant
THIRD CONJUGATION, -id' TYPE:	1	capiam	capiamus
	2	capias	capiatis
	3	capiat	capiant

FOURTH CONJUGATION:	1	audiam	audiamus
	2	audias	audiatīs
	3	audiat	audiant

Note: The stem audl- is shortened to audi- in all forms.

b. Passive To form the present passive subjunctive of these conjugations, add the passive personal endings to the modified stem. The -a- is shortened before -r and -ntur.

SECOND CONJUGATION:		SINGULAR	PLURAL
	1	monear	moneamur
	2	monearis, moneare	moneamini
	3	moneatur	moneantur

Note: As in the active, the stem mone- is shortened to mone- in all forms.

THIRD CONJUGATION, '-o' TYPE:	1	ducat	ducamur
	2	ducaris, ducare	ducamini
	3	ducatur	ducantur
THIRD CONJUGATION, '-io' TYPE:	1	capiat	capiamur
	2	capiaris, capiare	capiamini
	3	capiatur	capiantur
FOURTH CONJUGATION:	1	audiar	audiamur
	2	audiatis, audiare	audiamini
	3	audiatur	audiantur

Note: The stem audi- is shortened to audi- in all forms.

113. Direct Commands (or Requests) (3): Jussive Subjunctive

The present subjunctive may be used in the third person to give a command (cf. Sections 102 and no). This use is called the jussive subjunctive.

Translation formula: 'Let . '

Populus gaudeat!

'Let the people rejoice!'

Crucifigatur!

'Let him be crucified!'

Note: English usage requires that the understood subject of crucifigatur be translated into the English objective case—'him.'

114. Direct Questions (2): Deliberative Subjunctive

Occasionally the present subjunctive is used to ask what course of action one is to adopt (cf. Section 33).

Translation formula: 'Am I to . .' 'Are we to . .' 'Should . . '

Quod donum ad Dominum demus?

'What gift are we to give to the Lord?'

'What gift should we give to the Lord?'

Non mittam diaconos Romam?

'Am I not to send the deacons to Rome?'

'Should I not send the deacons to Rome?'

115. Conditional Clauses (1)

Thus far, independent uses of the subjunctive mood have been presented. But the most frequent use of the subjunctive is in a dependent clause.

A frequent form of subordination is the conditional clause, one which states a condition or contingency ('if, unless, in the event that, on condition that') on which the action of the main clause hinges. Depending on the type of conditional idea in mind, the indicative or the subjunctive is required.

A conditional clause and the independent clause on which it grammatically depends together comprise what is called a conditional sentence; the conditional clause is called the protasis, the main clause the apodosis. The words which introduce the protasis have already been met (in Unit 13)—si or nisi (the negative form, although si . . . non may also occur). Conditional sentences may be so constructed as to refer to past, present, or future action, and to imply possibility or impossibility of fulfillment.

a. Simple A simple conditional clause indicates a contingency, without implying anything about its fulfillment: 'if a book is popular, he reads it'; 'if the car broke down, they were late.' The verb of a simple conditional clause uses either the present or any past tense; the verb of the apodosis may take any logical form.

Si Dominum invocamus, nos audit.

'If we call upon the Lord, He hears us.'

Nisi legem faciebant, non just! erant.

'If they were not keeping the law, they were not righteous.'

Si beatus es, Deo gratias age!

'If you are happy, (then) thank God!'

b. Future A future conditional clause imagines an action in the future. There are two subclasses, the more vivid and the less vivid, depending on the degree of clarity or confidence with which the speaker sees the action.

1. More Vivid A future more vivid conditional clause has an indicative in either the future or the future-perfect tense (the second is the more emphatic). The verb of the apodosis is ordinarily a future indicative, although other equivalent forms, such as a jussive subjunctive, may occur.

Translation formula: 'if . . . does, (then) will do.'

Note: English usage requires that the Latin future or future-perfect in the protasis be translated by the English present. (In general, English substitutes the present for the future in any subordinate clause.)

Si voluntatem Dei faciet, salvus efficietur.

'If he does the will of God, he will be saved.'

Nisi voluntatem Dei fecerimus, in regnum caelorum non introibimus.

'Unless we (first) do the will of God, we will not enter into the kingdom of heaven.'

Si Petrus venerit, cum Paulo cenet!

'If Peter comes, let him dine with Paul!'

2. Less Vivid A future less vivid conditional clause has a verb in the present subjunctive. The verb of the apodosis is ordinarily a present indicative or a present subjunctive.

TRANSLATION FORMULA:

Protasis: 'if . . . should do,'

Apodosis (Ind.): '(then) . . . does.'

(Subj.): '(then) . . . would do.'

Si agnus unus amittatur, pastor bonus est maestus.

'If one lamb should be lost, the good shepherd is sad.'

Si Petrus domum intret, fratres orantes videat.

'If Peter should enter the house, he would see his brothers praying.'

Note: The use of the subjunctive in the apodosis constitutes what is termed the potential subjunctive. This use is rare by itself, but common enough in a conditional sentence.

Vocabulary Notes

Apart from its prefix, exspecto is a frequentative form of specie, specere, spexi, spectus 'look (at)' (Unit 13). Frequentative verbs denote repeated action, and are formed by adding first conjugation endings to the base of a perfect passive participle.

Lacrimor is the denominative verb formed from lacrima (Unit 20)

Laetor and collaetor (denominatives of laetus, Unit n), often take an ablative of cause: adventu Domini laetamur 'we rejoice because of the coming of the Lord.'

Distinguish miseror (another denominative from miser, Unit 20) from misereor (Unit 20); miseror takes the accusative: Jesus mulierem miseratus est 'Jesus pitied the woman.'

Note that the compound of sdlor may be either cOnsolor or con-solo, with no difference in meaning.

Amplector 'embrace' has both a literal and a figurative meaning: 'embrace a person' or 'embrace an idea, a cause, a project, etc.'

Note that fungor has its object in the ablative case (a form of the ablative of means): sacerdds ritu functus est 'the priest performed the ceremony.'

The -sc- in nosed shows that it is an inceptive verb in its present-stem system: 'begin to know.' Consequently, the perfect has the force of a present: '(now) know.' Compare: novum testamentum noscimus 'we are getting to know the New Testament'; novum testamentum novimus 'we know the New Testament.' Notice that the compounds of nosed may preserve the g of the archaic spelling, gnosco. Nosed and cognosco may take an object infinitive: diaconus legere novit 'the deacon knows how to read.'

Ingridior has two basic meanings, depending on the sense attached to the prefix in-: intensive ('walk along') or motion toward ('walk into, come in').

Substantia is a word of post-classical origin: the noun-making suffix -ia has been added to the present participial base of the verb substo [sub + sto (Unit 13)].

As is often the case with fourth declension nouns, affectus, con-spectus, and fletus have been formed from the perfect passive participles of verbs: afficid (Unit 6), specio (Unit 13), fled (Unit 25).

Assiduus literally means 'inclined to sit at (a place).' The adjective-forming suffix -uus has been added to the present stem of sedeo (Unit 23) prefixed by ad-. Hence the meaning: 'constant, unceasing.'

Although senex is an adjective of a single ending, its major use is as a substantive: 'old man.'

The adjective liber 'free' is the source of the denominative verb libero (Unit 5).

Neque, or nec, regularly stands in place of et non. Nec rarely stands before a vowel.

Unit 22

116. Imperfect Subjunctive

All verbs, whether regular or not, form the imperfect tense of the subjunctive mood in the same manner: the entire second principal part, with the final e lengthened, is used as the base; to this are added the personal endings.

a. Active Active forms of the imperfect subjunctive are compounded of the modified second principal part and the active personal endings. The -e- is shortened, as usual, before -m, -t, and -nt.

laudarem	monerem	ducerem
laudares	moneres	duceres
laudaret	moneret	duceret
laudaremus	moneremus	duceremus
laudaretis	moneretis	duceretis
laudarent	monerent	ducerent
caperem	audirem	essem
caperes	audires	esses
caperet	audiret	esset
caperemus	audiremus	essemus
caperetis	audiretis	essetis
caperent	audirent	essent
possem	irem	vellem
posses	ires	velles
posset	iret	vellet
possemus	iremus	vellemus
possetis	iretis	velletis
possent	irent	veilent

b. Passive Passive forms of the imperfect subjunctive are compounded of the modified second principal part and the passive personal endings. The -e- is shortened, as usual, before -r and -ntur.

laudarer	monerer	ducerer
laudareris/-re	monereris/-re	ducereris/-re
laudaretur	moneretur	duceretur
laudaremur	moneremur	duceremur
laudaremini	moneremini	duceremini
laudarentur	monerentur	ducerentur
caperer	audirer	mirarer
capereris/-re	audireris/-re	mirareris/-re
caperetur	audiretur	miraretur
caperemur	audiremur	miraremur
caperemini	audiremini	miraremini
caperentur	audirentur	mirarentur

Note that the deponent verb miror, mirari, —, miratus sum forms its imperfect subjunctive as if it had an active infinitive (mirare). This is true of all deponent verbs: e.g., patior, pat!, —, passus sum, a verb of the third conjugation, first reconstructs the hypothetical present active infinitive (patere) before adding the passive personal endings—paterer, patereris/-re, pateretur, etc.

117. Sequences of Tenses: Subordinate Use of Subjunctives

Although the subjunctive mood may be used as the verb of an independent clause (see Sections no, 113, 114, 134, and 153b), its chief use is as the verb of a subordinate clause (cf. Section 115). As its etymology declares, it is the mood which 'tends to be subjoined.'

Subjunctives occur in subordinate clauses of condition, purpose, result, and the like, and in indirect forms of statements, commands, and questions.

Which subjunctive tense to employ in a subordinate clause—the present, imperfect, perfect, or pluperfect—is determined partly by the tense of the verb in the main clause, and partly by the time relationship of the subordinate verb to the main verb.

Subordinate clauses requiring the subjunctive must use a present or a perfect if the main verb is primary, and an imperfect or a pluperfect if the main verb is secondary. The primary tenses are those which refer to present or future time: the present, future, future-perfect, and perfect (with completed aspect, 'has/have'); the secondary tenses are those which refer to past time: the imperfect, perfect (with simple aspect), and pluperfect.

A present subjunctive indicates time contemporaneous with or subsequent to a primary main verb; a perfect subjunctive, time prior to a primary main verb. These relationships constitute primary sequence.

An imperfect subjunctive indicates time contemporaneous with or subsequent to a secondary main verb; a pluperfect subjunctive, time prior to a secondary main verb. These relationships constitute secondary sequence.

Note: The terms 'contemporaneous' time and 'simultaneous' time may be used interchangeably; cf. Section 100.

INDEPENDENT CLAUSE		SUBORDINATE CLAUSE
		Contemp./Subseq.	Prior
1.	Any primary tense:
	Present
	Future	Present	Perfect
	Perfect (completed)	Subjunctive	Subjunctive
	Future-Perfect
2.	Any secondary tense:
	Imperfect	Imperfect	Pluperfect
	Perfect (simple)	Subjunctive	Subjunctive
	Pluperfect

The operation of these sequences of tenses has already been illustrated in part by the future less vivid conditional sentence (Section nzh.2): a present tense in the apodosis, or main clause, is accompanied in the protasis, or subordinate clause, by a present subjunctive (signaling time contemporaneous with a primary tense).

118. Purpose Clauses

The statement of an action may be accompanied by a subordinate clause which expresses the purpose or intention of the action; such a clause answers the question why: Paul went to Rome in order that he might see Peter. Why did Paul go to Rome? 'in order that he might see Peter.'

Purpose clauses always use the subjunctive mood. Since the goal or aim expressed in the purpose clause is necessarily subsequent in time to that of the main verb, by the rules of the sequences of tenses, only the present or the imperfect tense can logically occur, depending on whether the main verb is a primary or a secondary tense. (See the chart above.)

a. Adverbial Most purpose clauses are strictly adverbial, answering only the question why. The sign-words for the adverbial purpose clause are ut for the affirmative and ne for the negative; they occur only at the beginning of a clause.

Primary sequence:

Translation formula: 'in order that . . . may'

		intrat
Paulus in domum	⟨	intrabit	⟩	ut Petrum videat.
		intravit
		intraverit	J

'Paul (enters/will enter/has entered/will have entered) the house in order that he may see Peter.'

Jesus in domum intravit ne a turba videatur.

'Jesus has entered the house in order that he may not be seen by the crowd.'

Secondary sequence:

Translation formula: 'in order that . . . might'

		intrabat
Paulus in domum	⟨	intravit	⟩	ut Petrum videret.
		intraverat

'Paul (was entering/entered/had entered) the house in order that he might see Peter.'

Jesus in domum intrabat ne a turba videretur.

'Jesus was entering the house in order that he might not be seen by the crowd.'

b. Relative The relative purpose clause answers the question who (or whom) as well as why; here the relative pronoun (qui, quae, quod) replaces the sign-word ut; the antecedent is expressed in the main clause. Occasionally a relative adverb (e.g., ubi) introduces a relative purpose clause.

To avoid ambiguity, it is often better to translate a relative purpose clause either with the formula prescribed for an adverbial purpose clause, i.e., 'in order that . . . may/might' (rather than 'who may/might') or with the English infinitive of purpose.

Paulus quattuor diaconos misit, qui Petrum viderent.

['Paul sent the four deacons who might see Peter.']

'Paul sent the four deacons in order that they might see Peter.'

'Paul sent the four deacons to see Peter.'

Paulus diaconem Romain misit, ubi Petrum videret.

['Paul sent the deacon to Rome, where he might see Peter.']

'Paul sent the deacon to Rome in order that there he might see Peter.'

'Paul sent the deacon to Rome to see Peter there.'

119. Infinitive of Purpose

As in English, the infinitive (often following a main verb of motion) may be employed for the expression of an aim, intention, or purpose.

Paulus Romam venit Petrum videre.

'Paul came to Rome to see Peter.'

120. Indirect Commands (or Requests)

After a verb of ordering or asking, an indirect command (or request) may be conveyed either by ut + subjunctive or by an accusative + infinitive.

Translation formula: 'that . . . ' or 'to . . . '

a. Subjunctive An indirect command (or request) may take the form of a substantive clause with ut + the subjunctive mood. Since the action of an indirect command must be subsequent to that of the main verb, only the present or the imperfect subjunctive may appear (depending on the sequence in operation). The negative is ne.

Deprecemur Deum ut peccata nostra nobis dimittat.

'Let us beseech God that he forgive us our sins.'

'Let us beseech God to forgive us our sins.'

Deum oramus ne deficiamus.

'We pray God that we not fail.'

Jesus dixit apostolis ut panes colligerent.

'Jesus told the apostles to collect the loaves.'

It is important to note that an indirect command (or request) is a noun clause, functioning as the direct object of the main verb, whereas a purpose clause is adverbial. In this last example, dixit has both an indirect object (apostolis) and a direct object (ut panes colligerent).

b. Infinitive An indirect command (or request) may take the form of an accusative + infinitive construction. This is in reality a double accusative—the person asked and the action requested.

Diaconus jussit populum drare.

'The deacon bade the people (to) pray.'

[jubed, jubere, Jussi, jussus 'command, ask, bid']

Vocabulary Notes

Dignor (the denominative from dignus, Unit 4) may take an object infinitive: dignor Romam videre 'I consider (it) worthwhile to see Rome',- or an accusative and ablative: dignor Petrum laude 'I consider Peter worthy of praise.'

Several verbs, some already seen, introduce indirect commands. Postulo, rogo, peto, orb (Unit 5), precor (Unit 20), and moneo (Unit 6) may take either construction: ut + subjunctive or accusative + infinitive. Jubeo takes only accusative + infinitive,- died, only ut + subjunctive. Most verbs of asking also take a double accusative (see Section 105).

Cura is the noun from which euro (Unit 19) has been formed. Distinguish between the English derivative 'cure' and the meaning of cura 'care, concern.'

Antistes is a compound of ante + std 'stand in front.'

Claritas is compounded of the base of clarus (Unit 4) and the noun-forming suffix -itas, -itatis, f.; cf. English 'bright' + noun-forming suffix '-ness' – 'brightness.'

Note that intercessid (from cedo, Unit 18) literally means 'a going between.'

Major ('greater') is the comparative of magnus ('great'). It illustrates a curious orthographical rule: intervocalic / is written singly though pronounced doubly (majjor). Thus the preceding vowel is always long by position.

Unit 23

121. Present Subjunctives of sum and possum

The present subjunctive of sum is compounded of the stem si- and the personal endings; for possum the stem is possl-. Long i is shortened before -m, -t, and -nt, as usual.

sim	simus	possim	possimus
sis	sitis	possis	possitis
sit	sint	possit	possint

122. Emphatic Demonstrative Pronouns/Adjectives: hie and ille

In English the demonstratives 'this' and 'that' may be used as pronouns or as adjectives: 'this is good,' 'this pie is good'; 'that is good,' 'that pie is good.' So too in Latin: hie, haec, hoc 'this' and ille, ilia, illud 'that' may be used either as pronouns or as adjectives. Such words specify or single out a particular person or thing; hence, the term 'demonstrative.' Their declensions are somewhat irregular, and so must be carefully learned.

123. Unemphatic Demonstrative Pronouns/Adjectives: is and iste

The demonstrative pronouns/adjectives is, ea, id and iste, ista, istud mean 'this' or 'that,' depending on the context. Less emphatic than hie or ille, they are used to refer again to a person or thing previously mentioned.

Dat.	ei	ei	ei	eis	eis	eis
Acc.	eum	earn	id	eos	eas	ea
Abl.	eo	ea	eo	eis	eis	eis

Note: Latin often makes up for its lack of a third-person pronoun by using is, ea, id; in such cases it is translated as 'he, his, him, she, it, they,' etc. Likewise, its need of a third-person pronominal adjective (his, her, its- their) is met by the use of the genitives: ejus 'of him, of her, of it' – 'his, her, its'; edrum (m./n.) 'of them' – 'their'; earum (f.) 'of them' – 'their.'

The demonstrative iste, ista, istud 'this, that,' almost identical in meaning to is, ea, id, sometimes has the added meaning of 'that of yours.'

Note that ille, ilia, illud (Section 122) and iste, ista, istud are declined exactly alike.

124. Result Clauses

The statement of an action or quality may be accompanied by a subordinate clause which expresses the consequence, effect, or result of the action or quality. Thus two clauses are linked, giving cause and effect. Result clauses use the subjunctive mood: the present tense in primary sequence or the imperfect in secondary sequence.

Often a word of degree or manner ('so, so great, of such a kind') occurs in the main clause, anticipating the result clause: talīs, tale 'such, of such a sort,' tantus, -a, -um 'so, so great,' ita 'so, thus, in this way,' sic 'so, thus,' tarn 'so, to such a degree.' If such a word is omitted from the main clause, it may be supplied from the context.

Translation formula: 'that. '

a. Adverbial Most result clauses are strictly adverbial, answering only the question, With what consequence? The sign-words for the adverbial result clause are ut for the affirmative and ut. . non for the negative.

Deus mundum sic dilexit, ut Filium nobis daret.

'God so loved the world that he gave us his Son.'

Fidelis et Justus est ut remittat nobis peccata nostra. I. Jn. i, 9.

'He is (so) faithful and just that he forgives us our sins.'

Pastor bonus oves custodit ita ut non amittantur.

'The good shepherd guards his sheep so that they are not lost.'

b. Relative The relative result clause answers the question who as well as with what consequence. The relative pronoun (qui, quae, quod) replaces the sign-word ut; the antecedent is expressed in the main clause. Here qui is equivalent to ut is 'that he.'

Deus mundum sic dilexit, qui Filium mitteret.

'God so loved the world, that he sent his Son.'

Notes: 1. A substantive clause of result may be introduced by facere, efficere, or the like. Translate 'see to it' or 'bring it about.'

Deus effecit ut Hebraei mare transirent.

'God saw to it (brought it about) that the Hebrews crossed the sea.'

2. Besides the infinitive, void takes a subjunctive construction (without ut); this may also be considered a substantive clause of result.

Vultis respondeam?

'Do you wish that I answer?'

125. Characterizing Relative Clauses

To express an action which is typical or characteristic of a person or thing, a relative clause with the subjunctive may be used. The main clause may simply indicate existence (est qui 'there is one who') or may include an adjective such as dignus or indignus.

Translation formula: '(the sort) who . .' or '(the sort) to . .'

Paulus est qui in viis Domini ambulet.

'Paul is (the sort) who walks in the ways of the Lord.'

Petrus erat dignus qui apostolos duceret.

'Peter was (the sort) worthy to lead the apostles.'

Vocabulary Notes

Amb may take an object infinitive: amat cantare 'he loves (likes) to sing.' Because of its connotations, amb is used rather sparingly in the Vulgate ^51 times, whereas diligb [Unit 14] appears 422 times).

Labor 'slide, (slip and) fall' may further mean 'fall away from the true faith, become apostate.'

Delicia may appear in the plural with a singular meaning (this is the only classical usage).

The adverbs ita, tarn, and sic are not used interchangeably: ita may modify adverbs, adjectives, and verbs; tarn, adverbs and adjectives; sic, verbs only.

Deum de Deo, lumen de lumine, Deum verum de Deo verum, genitum, non factum, consubstantialem Patri: per quem omnia facta sunt. Qui propter nos homines et propter nostram salutem descendit de caelis. Et incarnatus est de Spiritu Sancto ex Maria Virgine, et homo factus est. Unit 24

126. Present Subjunctives of eo and volo

The present subjunctive of the irregular verb eo has three elements: the stem e-, the sign of the present subjunctive, -a-, and the personal endings.

earn	eamus
eas	eatis
eat	eant

When uncompounded, several of these forms often give way to the equivalent forms of vadd, vadere, —, — 'go, walk, hurry': vadam, vadas, vadat; eamus, eatis, vadant.

The present subjunctive of the irregular verb void is compounded of the stem veil- and the personal endings.

velim	velimus
veils	velitis
velit	velint

127. Intensive Pronoun/Adjective: ipse

In English the element '-self' is used to intensify the meaning of a pronoun or a noun: 'I did it myself (I myself did it),' 'the boy did it himself (the boy himself did it).' The intensive pronoun/adjective ipse, ipsa, ipsum '-self' is used in a similar fashion; it may also appear alone, with the personal pronoun understood.

Ego ipse hoc feci.

'I myself did this (I did this myself).'

Puer ipse hoc fecit.

'The boy himself did this (the boy did this himself).'

Ipsa hoc fecit.

'She herself did this (she did this herself).'

Jesus sanavit mulieres ipsas.

'Jesus healed the women themselves.'

In ipsum credimus.

'We believe in him.'

Note the translation of ipsum: 'him himself' is avoided in English in favor of the simple pronoun said with greater stress (or italicized in print).

The pronominal suffix -met has an equivalent intensive force when attached to a pronoun.

Egomet Romain ibo.

'I myself will go to Rome.'

T will go to Rome myself.'

'I will go to Rome.'

Here, egomet is triply emphatic: ego is always emphatic (see Section 104); -met intensifies; the first position in a sentence is the most emphatic.

In the Nova Vulgata ipse, ipsa, ipsum is treated as a suffix after personal pronouns: e g., teipsum, vosmetipsos, vdbismetipsis, etc.

128. Conditional Clauses (2): Present Contrafactual

In English a conditional clause which implies that something is not at present true employs the past tense: 'if I were home [but just now I am not], I would be eating dinner now.' So too in Latin: a conditional clause spoken in the present concerning something which is not at the moment true uses the imperfect subjunctive. This is called the present contrafactual conditional clause. The apodosis (i.e., the main clause) may also use the imperfect subjunctive.

Translation formula: 'were . . . , would . . .'

Si Paulus esset hic, felices essemus.

'If Paul were here, we would be happy.'

The implication is clear: 'Paul is not now present, and so we are not now happy.' The statement is contrary to fact, in present time: hence, the imperfect subjunctive.

129. Gerundives

The future passive participle (see Section 97) is sometimes called the gerundive. This verbal adjective (e.g., laudandus, -a, -um '[having] to be praised') modifies a noun in any case except the nominative (which is reserved for the formation of the passive periphrastic conjugation [see Section 98b]). The gerundive is a passive construction where English prefers the active.

Petro erat desiderium Pauli videndi.

['To Peter there was the desire of Paul to-be-seen.']

'Peter had the desire of seeing Paul.'

Joannes venit ad populum baptizandum.

['John came for the people to-be-baptized.']

'John came to baptize the people.'

Joannes venit populi baptizandi causa.

['John came for the sake of the people to-be-baptized.']

'John came to baptize the people.'

Note that in the last two examples ad + gerundive and gerundive + causa are equivalent to purpose clauses, a construction to which the future passive participle quite naturally lends itself.

130. Gerunds

A gerund is the neuter singular of a gerundive used substantively and with an active meaning. Like the gerundive, it may occur in any case except the nominative. As a noun formed from a verb, it may take an object.

The English gerund, in -ing, translates the Latin gerund exactly. Unlike in English, there are no passive gerunds.

Nom. —

Gen. orandi 'of praying'

Dat. orando 'for/to praying'

Ace. orandum 'praying'

Ahl. orando 'from/with/in/by praying'

- Notes:* 1. The above is merely illustrative: nearly every verb has a gerund.
 2. The gerund makes up for the lack of a nominative by using the infinitive (also a verbal noun): drare est bonum 'to pray is good,' 'praying is good.'
 z. The gerund of ed is eundi, -0, -um, -0.

Jesus in montem subivit ad orandum.

'Jesus went up into the mountain for praying (to pray).'

Manducando vivimus.

'We live by eating.'

Paulus venit ad videndum fratres in Christo.

'Paul came for seeing (to see) his brothers in Christ.'

Diaconus ad ambonem accessit Evangelium legend! causa.

'The deacon approached the ambo for the sake of reading (to read) the Gospel.'

Ponere genu means 'to kneel.'

Vado replaces monosyllabic forms of eo: vadis for is, vadit for it, vade! for I!

Creator is the agent noun formed from cred (Unit 13).

Veritas is the noun built from the adjective verus (Unit 4).

Outside of the masculine nominative singular, dexter, dextera, dexterum may have syncopated forms: dextra for dextera, dextrum for dexterum, etc.

When pauci (rarely) occurs in the singular, it means 'little': e.g., pauca spes est 'there is little hope.'

Quidem, together with vero (Unit 20) or autem (Unit 9) in succeeding clauses, is translated 'on the one hand . . . on the other hand,' in imitation of a Greek idiom. It follows the emphatic word.

Simul ac or atque may be spelled as one word: simulac/simulatque. It takes the indicative mood.

Unit 25

131. Pluperfect Subjunctive

The pluperfect subjunctive of any verb is formed from a perfect base or participle, in combination with the imperfect subjunctive of sum (essem, esses, esset, etc.).

a. Active The active forms of the pluperfect subjunctive are compounded of the base of the perfect active and the imperfect subjunctive of sum, slightly respelled; i.e., initial e- becomes -i-.

laudavissem	monuisssem	duxissem
laudavisses	monuisses	duxisses
laudavisset	monuisset	duxisset
laudavissemus	monuisssemus	duxissemus
laudavissetis	monuissetis	duxissetis
laudavissent	monuissent	duxissent
cepissem	audavissem	issem
cepisses	audavisses	isses
cepisset	audavisset	isset
cepissemus	audavissemus	issemus
cepissetis	audavissetis	issetis
cepissent	audavissent	issent

Note: When the shorter perfect base of ed is used, double i is contracted to !: iissem > issem; this is true of any third principal part in -ivi(-ii): e.g., audiissem > audissem.

b. Passive The passive forms of the pluperfect subjunctive are made up of the perfect passive participle and the imperfect subjunctive of sum.

laudatus, -a, -um essem laudatus, -a, -um esses laudatus, -a, -um esset laudati, -ae, -a essemus laudati, -ae, -a essetis

 capti, -ae, -a essemus capti, -ae, -a essetis
 capti, -ae, -a essent

132. Conditional Clauses (3): Past Contrafactual

In English a conditional clause which implies that something was not true at some time in the past employs the pluperfect: 'if I had known that you were sick [but at that time I did not], I would have visited you then.' So too in Latin: a conditional clause stating something not true at some time past uses the pluperfect subjunctive. This is called the past contrafactual conditional clause. The apodosis (i.e., the main clause) may also use the pluperfect subjunctive.

Translation formula: 'had . . . , would have . . .'

Si Paulus fuisset hic, felices fuissemus.

'If Paul had been here, we would have been happy.'

Nisi Filius Dei in mundum missus esset, salvi non facti essemus.

'If the Son of God had not been sent into the world, we would not have been saved.'

133. Clauses of Fearing

A verb of fearing may have as its object a subjunctive clause introduced by ne or ut. Since in a verb of fearing there is the implied desire for the opposite of a state or action, ne quite logically introduces an affirmative clause and ut a negative.

Paulus timet ne Romani Petrum interfectori sint.

'Paul fears that the Romans are going to kill Peter/[timed, timere, timui, — 'fear, be afraid (of)'] Paulus timuit ut Corinthii essent fideles.

'Paul feared that the Corinthians were not being faithful.'

134. Unattainable Wishes

A wish for an action still possible uses the present subjunctive (see the optative subjunctive, Section nob). But a wish for an action unattainable or impossible uses either the imperfect or the pluperfect subjunctive. The sign-word utinam is frequently used to introduce an unattainable wish.

a. Present Time Like the present contrafactual conditional clause (see Section 128), an unattainable wish in present time uses the imperfect subjunctive.

Translation formula: 'Would that . were' or 'I wish that . were'

Utinam Petrus adhuc viveret!

'Would that/I wish that Peter were still living!'

b. Past Time Like the past contrafactual conditional clause (see Section 132), an unattainable wish referring to past time uses the pluperfect subjunctive.

Translation formula: 'Would that . had' or 'I wish that . had'

Utinam Petrum vidisses!

'Would that/I wish that you had seen Peter!'

135. Indirect Statements (2): Object Clauses with Subjunctives

Indirect statements in the form of object clauses introduced by quod, quia, quoniam 'that' may take the indicative (see Section 43); this is called the retained indicative. But the use of the subjunctive mood in such clauses emphasizes the grammatical subordination of the indirect statement.

Invenimus quod Paulus Romam jam isset.

'We discovered that Paul had already gone to Rome.'

Credunt quia Christus sit Dominus.

'They believe that Christ is Lord.'

Vocabulary Notes

Besides a clause of fearing, timed may take a direct object or an object infinitive: Petrum timed 'I fear Peter'; vir non timuit Jesum alloqui 'the man was not afraid to address Jesus.'

Note that both curro and posed form the perfect active by re-duplicating the first two letters of the base: cucurri, poposci.

Whether fugio is used to mean 'flee' or 'flee from,' it takes the accusative (not the ablative): Petrus militem fugit 'Peter fled (from) the soldier.'

Filia 'daughter' and filius 'son' share the same base. The dative/ablative pl. of filia is filiabus. Cf. anima (Unit 7).

Patria is an adjectival form used substantively (from patrius, -a, -um 'of father, paternal,' from pater 'father' [Unit 14]). It is feminine because the understood noun is terra 'land.'

Effusio is the noun formed from the verb effundo (Unit 16).

The first meaning of solemnis is 'annual'; that which is celebrated annually is a 'solemn' feast. Hence, when used generally, it means 'customary.'

Ave (pl., avete) and salve (pl., salvete) are interchangeable words of greeting and leave-taking. These are imperative forms from verbs otherwise very little used (i.e., aved and salved).

Sive (seu) . . sive (seu) introduce alternative conditional clauses, which may take any logical form. Often the alternatives consist of just a single word each: sive dives sive pauper, Petrus est felix 'whether rich or poor, Peter is happy.'

136. Perfect Subjunctive

The perfect subjunctive is formed from a perfect base or participle.

a. Active The active forms of the perfect subjunctive are compounded of the base of the perfect active, the suffix -eri-, and the active personal endings.

laudaverim	monuerim	duxerim
laudaveris	monueris	duxeris

ceperimus	audiverimus	fuerimus
ceperitis	audiveritis	fueritis
ceperint	audiverint	fuerint

Note: Although these forms are largely identical with those of the future-perfect indicative, context will help to distinguish them.

b. Passive The passive forms of the perfect subjunctive are made up of the perfect participle and the present subjunctive of sum.

laudatus, -a, -um sim	monitus, -a, -um sim
laudatus, -a, -um sis	monitus, -a, -um sis

137. Direct Questions (3)

As Section zz points out, a direct statement may be converted into a direct question by the addition of a question mark or by the suffixing of the enclitic particle -ne to the one word whose meaning calls the question into being. The answer may be either affirmative or negative.

a. Affirmative Answer Implied When the speaker desires that his listener agree to the truth of a proposition, he may cast it in the form of a direct question introduced by nonne, the signal that an affirmative answer is expected.

Nonne Christus iterum venturus est?

'Christ is going to come again, is he not?'

'Is it not the case that Christ is going to come again?'

Note that nonne = non + -ne.

b. Negative Answer Implied When the speaker desires that his listener assent to the falsity of a proposition, he may express it as a direct question introduced by numquid, the sign that a negative answer is expected.

Numquid Paulus Hierosolymis interfectus est?

'Paul was not killed in Jerusalem, was he?'

'Is it not the case that Paul was not killed in Jerusalem?'

138. Indirect Questions

As in English, direct questions may be converted into dependent clauses, with a change in personal reference where logical: 'Where are my slippers?' indirectly quoted may become 'Your father is asking where his slippers are.' Cf. Section 7.

a. Introductory Words Indirect questions may be introduced by si 'if, whether' or any interrogative pronoun, adjective, or adverb.

b. Subjunctive Since an indirect question is a subordinate clause, the mood of subordination, the subjunctive, is often used in place of an original indicative.

direct : Quare Paulus Romam iit?
'Why did Paul go to Rome?'

indirect : Discipulus rogat quare Paulus Romam ierit.
'The disciple is asking why Paul went to Rome.'

Note that the perfect subjunctive is required because it represents prior time in primary sequence (see Section 117).

c. Retained Indicative An original indicative of a direct question may be retained when a question is indirectly expressed. English has no means to convey this nuance.

Discipulus rogat quare Paulus Romam iit.

'The disciple is asking why Paul went to Rome.'

139. Donee and dum Clauses

Contemporaneity ('while, as long as') or expectancy ('until') may be expressed by clauses introduced by donee or dum. The indicative or the subjunctive occurs in these clauses, with no difference in meaning. Context determines whether time simultaneous or subsequent is intended.

Donee (dum) Paulus rediit, fratres erant maesti.

'Until Paul returned, his brothers were sad.'

Donee (dum) vita est, spes est.

'While/as long as there is life, there is hope.'

Missam non incipiemus, dum (donee) antistes adveniat.

'We will not begin the Mass until the bishop arrives.'

Petro occurrerunt, dum in via ambulerent.

'They met Peter while they were walking on the road.'

140. Interrogative Pronoun: quis, quid

The interrogative pronoun quis, quid 'who, what' has plural forms which are identical with those of the interrogative adjective (see Section 53). The singular is as follows:

	m./f.	N.
Nom	quis ('who?')	quid ('what?')
Gen.	cujus ('whose?')	cujus ('of what?')
Dat.	cui ('for/to whom?')	cui ('for/to what?')
Acc.	quem ('whom?')	quid ('what?')
Abl.	quo ('from/with/in/by whom?')	quo ('from/with/in/by what?')

Quis me vocat?

'Who is calling me?'

Cujus liber est?

'Whose book is this?'

A quo Jesus traditus est?

'By whom was Jesus betrayed?'

Qui sunt hi Christiani?

'Who are these Christians?'

Quibuscum Jesus Pascham manducavit?

'With whom did Jesus eat the Pasch?'

Note that the preposition cum follows quo or quibus and coalesces with it: quocum, quibuscum. Cf. Section 104.

141. Adverbial Accusative

Certain neuter pronouns and adjectives occur in the accusative case with an adverbial force. Among these are the following:

[ut] quid 'as to what, why' nihil 'as to nothing, not at all' quod si 'as to which if, but if' quod nisi 'as to which unless, but unless' omnia 'as to all things, in all respects'

Quid in civitatem inierunt?
 'Why did they go into the city?'

Illi legem nihil faciunt.
 'Those people do not keep the law at all.'

Quod si Patrem invocaveritis, vos audiet.
 'But if you call upon the Father, he will hear you.'

Semper gaudeo, quoniam omnia fideles remanetis.
 'Always I rejoice because in all respects you are remaining faithful.'

Vocabulary Notes

LaborO 'work' is unrelated to labor 'fall' (Unit 23).

Nescid is the verb scid (Unit 6) with the negative prefix ne-. It has a shorter perfect active form—nescii—whereas scid only has the longer form—scivi.

Lucifer 'daystar' literally means 'light-bearer.'

Debitor is the agent noun from debed (Unit 12).

Doctor is the agent noun from doceo 'teach' (Unit 19).

Spirituals, spirituale may also be spelled without the -u-.

When quis, quid 'who? what?' is not used to ask a question and occurs in a clause introduced by si, nisi, numquid, or ne, it means 'someone, something; anyone, anything.' A related word with these latter meanings (i.e., aliquis, aliquid) will be presented in Unit 31.

142. Comparison of Adjectives: Positive, Comparative, and Superlative

In English, the positive degree of an adjective is the uncomparated form: 'Daniel is tall.' The comparative degree involves a comparison between two: 'Daniel is taller than Stephen.' The superlative degree is the extreme degree of an adjective, usually involving three or more (whether expressed or implied): 'Of all his brothers Daniel is the tallest.' The suffixes -er and -est are regularly added to the positive degree of an adjective to make the other two degrees: tall, taller, tallest; where this suffixing would be awkward, more and most are used instead: more delightful (not *delightfuler), most delightful (not *delightfulest). Some adjectives in English have irregular comparisons: e.g., good, better, best (not good, *gooder, *goodest).

Latin, too, has a) suffixes which indicate the comparative and superlative degrees, b) adjectives which are irregular in their comparison, and c) occasionally, separate adverbs to do the work of the comparative and superlative suffixes.

a. Forms Any adjective of either type (i.e., first/second declension adjectives or third declension adjectives) is declined as a third declension adjective of two endings when used in the comparative degree. This is formed by adding the suffix -idr- to the adjective base before adding the endings of the third declension; the masculine/feminine nominative singular has -ior, the neuter nominative singular -ius.

Note: Although comparatives use third declension endings, they are not declined like i-stem nouns (see Section 85).

Any adjective of either type is declined as a first/second declension adjective when used in the superlative degree. This is formed by adding the suffix -issim- to the adjective base before adding the endings of the first and second declensions.

beatus, -a, -um 'blessed, happy':

beatissimus, -a, -um 'happiest' felix {gen., felicis) 'happy, blessed':

felicissimus, -a, -um 'happiest'

- Notes:*
1. Adjectives in -er in the masculine nominative singular add to this form (not to the adjective base) the suffix -rim-, acer, acris, acre, acerrimus, -a, -um.
 2. Adjectives ending in -ilis in the masculine/feminine nominative singular add to the base -lim-: similis, -e: simillimus, -a, -um.

Some common adjectives have irregular comparisons:

bonus, -a, -um
'good'

melior, melius
'better'

optimus, -a, -um
'best'

malus, -a, -um 'bad'	pejor, pejus 'worse'	pessimus, -a, -um 'worst'
magnus, -a, -um 'great'	major, majus 'greater'	maximus, -a, -um 'greatest'
multus, -a, -um 'much, many'	plus (indecl.); plures, plura 'more'	plurimus, -a, -um 'most, very many'
parvus, -a, -um 'small'	minor, minus 'smaller'	minimus, -a, -um 'smallest'
prope (adv.) 'near'	propior, propius 'nearer'	proximus, -a, -um 'nearest, next'
prae, pro (prep.) 'before'	prior, prius 'former, earlier'	primus, -a, -um 'first'
superus, -a, -um 'above'	superior, superius 'higher, upper'	supremus, -a, -um summus, -a, -um 'highest'

b. Uses In general, these three degrees are used as they are in English, i.e., when comparison is expressed or implied: beatior vir 'a happier man' (than another), beatissimus vir 'the happiest man' (of all). But when the comparison is more remote, then 'rather' and 'very' may be used to translate the comparative and the superlative: beatior vir 'a rather happy man,' beatissimus vir 'a very happy man.'

When the comparative degree is used to express an explicit comparison, the adverb quam 'than' may be used; the comparands have the same case on either side of quam: Petrus erat felicius quam Jdannes 'Peter was happier than John.' Note that in both languages there is ellipsis: Petrus erat felicius quam Joannes [erat felix] 'Peter was happier than John [was happy].'

Occasionally the comparative degree is employed where English would prefer the superlative degree: major est caritas 'the greatest is charity.'

When the superlative degree is used, it may be strengthened by a partitive genitive: Petrus erat felicissimus omnium apostolorum 'Peter was the happiest of all the apostles.'

Notes: 1. The equivalent of the comparative or the superlative may be formed by using the adverbs magis 'more' or maxime 'most' with the positive degree: magis beatus 'happier',- maxime beatus 'happiest.'

Notes continued:

2. When novus, -a, -um 'new, recent' is used in the superlative it often means 'last, latest': in novissimo die 'on the last day.'
- Z. Note that such a phrase as ante/super omnes bonus 'good before/over all' is a periphrasis for 'best of all.'

143. Ablative of Comparison

The second of the two comparands in a comparison may employ the ablative case- this construction does not use quam.

Petrus erat felicius Joanne.

'Peter was happier than John.'

Note: This ablative construction is used only if the first comparand is in either the nominative or the accusative case- otherwise, to avoid confusion, the quam construction is employed.

144. Ablative of Degree of Difference

The ablative of a noun or a neuter adjective indicating some measurement or intensity may accompany an adjective in the comparative or superlative degree.

Haec mensa est pede altior quam illa.

'This table is higher by a foot than that one.'

'This table is a foot higher than that one.'

Petrus erat multo felicius quam Joannes.

'Peter was happier by much than John.'

'Peter was much happier than John.'

Illud dies erat multo maestissima omnium.

'That day was (by) much the saddest one of all.'

Vocabulary Notes

The third principal part of lavo, a first conjugation verb, is lavi (not lavavi). Lautus and lotus are alternative spellings of the perfect passive participle. When used in the passive, lavo may have a reflexive force (like that of the Greek middle voice): 'to wash oneself, to bathe.'

Mered is often followed by an object infinitive: mered facere 'I deserve to do.' This is the equivalent of meritd facto 'I rightly/deservedly do.'

Statud may take the indirect command construction, ut + subjunctive.

In works written from a Jewish perspective, gens in the plural may mean 'Gentiles,' i.e., non-Jews; but from a Christian perspective, 'heathens,' i.e., non-Christians.

Salutare is the neuter of the adjective salutaris, -e (Unit 16) used substantively.

Ait and aiunt are present tense forms, but often are used to represent a past tense: 'he says, he said; they say, they said.'

Besides being employed in comparisons, quam may modify an adjective, often in an exclamation: quam bonus es! 'how good you are!' It may also intensify a positive or a superlative with the meaning 'as . . . as possible': puer erat quam laetus/laetissimus 'the boy was as joyful as possible.'

Quo refers to motion to which; unde, motion from which.

Tantum means 'only' in the sense 'just so much and no more.'

Unit 28

145. Reflexive Adjective and Pronoun: suus; —, sui

An adjective or pronoun which refers to the subject of a sentence is termed a reflexive. In the first and second persons, the reflexive forms are identical with the first and second person pronouns and pronominal adjectives: ego diligo me 'I love myself', tu diligis te 'you love yourself', ego habed meum librum 'I have my (own) book'; tu habes tuum librum 'you have your (own) book,' etc.

But in the third person there are separate forms for the reflexive: the adjective suus, -a, -um 'one's own' and the pronoun —, sui 'one-self.' Suus, -a, -um is an adjective of the first and second declensions. The third person reflexive pronoun is declined as follows:

	singular	/plural
Nom.	—
Gen.	sui
Oat.	sibi
Acc.	se
Abl.	se

- Notes:*
1. Logically, this pronoun has no nominative form, since its use is confined to the reflexive idea.
 2. These forms—suus, -a, -um and —, sui—are used to refer either to a singular or to a plural subject.
 3. The adjective has nominative forms, since its referend may also occur as the subject in the preceding clause.
 4. As it is with other pronouns, the preposition cum is used enclitically: secum.

Hic diligit se.

'This man loves himself.'

Haec diligunt se.

'These women love themselves.'

Hi diligunt suos fratres.

'These men love their (own) brothers.'

Venit, sed sui eum non cognoverunt.

'He came, but his own people did not know him.'

Note that in this last example sui, the reflexive adjective used substantively, is the nominative subject of its own sentence; a reflexive form has been used because it refers to the subject of the preceding clause. Eum, the object of cognoverunt, is not a reflexive because it does not refer to the subject of its sentence.

In English 'he saw his brothers' is ambiguous: is 'his' reflexive or not? In Latin there is no ambiguity: vidit fratres ejus 'he saw the brothers of that man'; vidit suos fratres 'he saw his (own) brothers.'

146. Six Partly Irregular Adjectives

Some otherwise regular adjectives of the first and second declensions are irregular only in their genitive and dative singular forms. The most common are alius, alia, aliud 'other, another'; alter, altera, alterum 'the other (of two)'; nullus, nulla, nullum 'not any, no'; solus, sola, solum 'only, alone'; totus, tota, totum 'all, the whole'; unus, una, unum 'one; a, an' (already introduced in Unit 7).

unus, -a, -um 'one; a, an'

SINGULAR

	M.	F.	N.
Nom.	unus	una	unum
Gen.	unius	unius	unius
Dat.	uni	uni	uni
Acc.	unum	unam	unum
Abl.	uno	una	uno

- Notes: 1. unus, -a, -um (quite logically) has no plural; the plurals of the other five adjectives are regular, if they occur.
2. These genitive and dative singular forms have already been encountered in the demonstrative and intensive pronouns (see Sections 122, 123, and 127).

147. Comparison of Adverbs

For the positive degree, adjectives of the first and second declensions form their adverbs by adding -e to the base; third declensions add -iter to the base. For all comparative forms of adjectives the adverb of the comparative degree is identical with the neuter accusative singular. For all superlative degree of the adverb is formed by adding -e to the base of the superlative form of the adjective.

aptus, -a, -um: (‘suitable’)	apte (‘suitably’)	aptius (‘more suitably’)	aptissime (‘most suitably’)
suavis, suave: (‘sweet’)	suaviter (‘sweetly’)	suavius (‘more sweetly’)	suavissime (‘most sweetly’)

- Notes: 1. Exceptions occur, but only in the formation of the positive degree. These are the three main types: a) those in -um (the neuter accusative singular), e.g., tantum ‘only’ or multum ‘much’; b) those in -o (the neuter ablative singular), e.g., merito ‘rightly’; c) those in -e, e.g., bene ‘well’ and male ‘poorly, badly.’
2. Novissime ‘most recently’ may mean ‘finally, at last.’ Cf. Section 142b, Note 2.
3. Quam may be used with a positive or superlative degree of an adverb: quam suaviter/suavissime ‘as sweetly as possible.’

148. Cum Clauses

The subordinating conjunction cum has several distinct uses: it may be used to introduce purely temporal clauses, 'when' (see Section 69), temporal-circumstantial clauses, '(under the circumstances) when,' causal clauses, 'since,' and concessive clauses, 'although.' These last three constructions employ the subjunctive mood. Here English with its different subordinates is far less ambiguous; the precise translation of cum must be determined from a careful study of the context.

temporal	-circumstantial	:	Cum Jesus turbam doceret, quidam eum accessit. '(Under the circumstances) when Jesus was teaching the crowd, a certain man approached him.'
causal	:	Cum vir esset felix, prae gaudid clamavit. 'Since the man was happy, he shouted for joy.'
concessive	:	Cum vir! male haberent, laborare (tamen) non desierunt. 'Although the men were sick, (nevertheless) they did not stop working.'

Note that the recognition of the concessive use may be made easier by the presence of tamen in the main clause. Such is the case with the similarly adaptable construction, the ablative absolute (see Section 68).

Vocabulary Notes

Distinguish between fundo, fundere, fudi, fusus 'pour' (Unit 16) and fundo, fundare, fundavi, fundatus 'establish, found.'

Magnified is a multiple-base compound: magnus 'great' + a form of facid 'make.' See Vocabulary Notes, Unit n.

Veneror, a deponent verb, has a collateral form, venero. Context will reveal whether a passive form is active or passive in meaning: Dominus veneratus est 'the Lord was worshiped'; Dominum veneratus est 'he worshiped the Lord.'

Perhaps the most frequent form of amplus is its comparative adverb amplius 'any more, more.'

Perfectus is in reality the perfect passive participle of perficid (Unit 18).

Suus 'one's own' takes its specific translation from its context, 'his own, her own, its own, their own,' depending on the gender and number of its referend.

Invicem, essentially an adverb, is often used in ecclesiastical texts as an indeclinable reciprocal reflexive pronoun,- as such it may be used with a preposition: ad invicem 'to one another,' ab invicem 'from one another,' etc.

Alius and alter may be used in succeeding, coordinated clauses: alius . . alius 'one . . another'; alter . . alter 'the one . . the other.'

Like suus, the reflexive pronoun —, sui 'oneself' takes its exact translation from the gender and number of its referend: 'himself, herself, itself, themselves.'

Unit 29

149. Indefinite Pronouns and Adjectives: quis; aliquis; aliqui, etc.

When quis, quid 'who, what' is used as an indefinite pronoun 'someone, something' (see Unit 26, vocabulary notes), it may be preceded by si, nisi, numquid, or ne; if not, it has ali- prefixed to it: aliquis, aliquid 'someone, something.' The adjectival form is declined exactly like the relative pronoun (see Section 53), except that the feminine nominative singular is spelled -qua (not -quae): aliqui, aliqua, aliquod 'some, any.'

When the relative pronoun qui, quae, quod 'who, which' is itself used indefinitely, it is unchanged except for the replacement of quae by qua: qui, qua, quod 'some, any.' Other indefinites formed from the relative pronoun are quicumque, quaecumque, quodcumque 'whoever, whatever' (see Section 53); quidam, quaedam, quiddam 'a certain one or thing' (Unit 12); quidam, quaedam, quoddam 'a certain' (Unit 12).

Quis, quid 'who? what?' leads to:

quis, quid 'someone, something' [may be preceded by si, nisi, numquid, or ne] aliquis, aliquid 'someone, something'

Qui, quae, quod 'who, which' leads to:

qui, qua, quod 'some, any' [may be preceded by si, nisi, numquid, or ne] aliqui, aliqua, aliquod 'some, any' quicumque, quaecumque, quodcumque 'whoever, whatever' quidam, quaedam, quiddam 'a certain one or thing' [pronoun]

quidam, quaedam, quoddam 'a certain' [adjective]

150. Dative of Purpose; Double Dative Construction

The dative case may be used to express purpose or effect intended.

Hic odio me habet.

'This man holds me for the purpose of hatred.'

'This man hates me.'

The dative of purpose is often used with another dative, a dative of reference. This is called the double dative construction.

Jesus est saluti nobis.

'Jesus is for the purpose of salvation with reference to us.'

'Jesus serves as our salvation.'

'Jesus is our salvation.'

151. Review of Clauses: Time, Cause, and Concession

Clauses of time, cause, and concession use a variety of subordinating conjunctions with either the indicative or the subjunctive mood.

a. Time Temporal clauses introduced by cum 'when,' ubi 'when, as soon as,' ut 'when, as,' quando, 'when,' simul atque (simul ac) 'as soon as,' and postquam 'after' take the indicative only.

Temporal clauses introduced by antequam 'before,' priusquam 'before,' dum 'while, as long as- until,' and donee 'while, as long as- until' may take either the indicative or the subjunctive, with no difference in meaning.

Temporal clauses introduced by cum '(under the circumstances) when' take the subjunctive only.

Note: -cumque may be suffixed to ubi, ut, and quando to add a generalizing force: ubicumque, utcumque, quanddeumque 'whenever.' Cf. qui 'who': quicumque 'whoever.'

b. Cause Causal clauses introduced by quia, quoniam, or quod 'because' take either the indicative or the subjunctive. The indicative is used to express actual cause- the subjunctive, to express either actual or alleged cause.

Causal clauses introduced by cum 'since' take the subjunctive only.

c. Concession Concessive clauses introduced by etsi, licet, or quamquam 'although' may take either the indicative or the subjunctive, with no distinction in meaning.

Concessive clauses introduced by cum 'although' take the subjunctive only.

d. Ablative Absolute A participle (see Sections 65 and 87b), or a participial construction (i.e., the ablative absolute [see Sections 68 and 87c]), may be used as the equivalent of a clause of time, cause, or concession.

Since no specific sign-word accompanies a participle to indicate its use, the context must be examined with care to determine the precise meaning.

Vocabulary Notes

Cordno is the denominative verb formed from corona (Unit 21).

Monstro, as a verb of showing (see Section 26), takes an indirect and a direct object; the object may be an object infinitive: monstravit nobis viam 'he showed us the way'; monstravit nobis Orare 'he showed us (how) to pray.'

Supplied is the denominative verb formed from the adjective supplex (Unit 17).

The Greek nominative singular ending of Magdalena also occurs: Magdalene.

Timor and timoratus are derived from timed (Unit 25).

Conclusio is the abstract noun derived from concludo (Unit 18).

The accusative singular of lampas is lampada, a transliteration of its Greek original.

Sanctificatid is the abstract noun derived from sanctified (Unit 11).

Pretidsus is compounded of the base of pretium 'price' (Unit 27) and the suffix -osus 'full of.'

Humilis forms its superlative with the suffix -limus: humillimus. See Section 142a, Note 2.

Though used as a subordinating conjunction, licet is properly a verb (to be formally presented in Unit 34).

Priusquam may be spelled as two words; a subordinating conjunction, it is formed in the same manner as postquam and antequam (Unit 12).

Unit 30

152. Present Infinitives: Active and Passive

The second principal part of every verb is the present active infinitive: laudare, monere, ducere, capere, audire; esse, posse, velle, ire. (See Section 2, of. 2.) In early Latin the ending was -se (still preserved in esse and posse, velle is an example of back-assimilation: velse > velle).

All present passive infinitives end in -i. To form them, change final -e to -i in the first, second, and fourth conjugations, - in the third conjugation, replace the stem vowel and the ending with -i.

ACTIVE	PASSIVE
laudare	laudari	('to praise/to be praised') monere	moneri	('to warn/to be warned') ducere	duel	('to lead/to be led') capere	cap!	('to take/to be taken') audire	audiri	('to hear/to be heard')

Note: The irregular verbs sum, possum, void, and eo have no passive present infinitives.

153. Negative Direct Commands (or Requests)

Commands (or requests) in the negative may be expressed through a negative particle + an infinitive, a subjunctive, or an indicative.

a. Ndli/nolite and Infinitive The isolated imperative forms noli (singular) and ndlite (plural) 'be unwilling, do not' take a complementary infinitive.

O puer, noli Here!

'O child, do not weep!'

O mulier, noli impleri odio!

'O woman, do not be filled with hatred!'

Pastores, nolite timere!

'Shepherds, do not be afraid!'

Mei discipuli, nolite a malis praecipi!

'My disciples, be unwilling to be taught by the wicked!'

b. Ne/non and Present or Perfect Subjunctive Ne or (less frequently) non may be used with the subjunctive tenses of primary sequence, the present or the perfect.

Ne tangas hoc!

'Do not touch this!'

Non ducaris!

'Do not be led!'

Ne laudetis illum!

'Do not praise that man!'

Ne tradideris me!

'Do not betray me!'

c. Non and Future Indicative The jussive future indicative (see Section 1 roc) uses non for the negative.

Non his maledices!

'You shall not speak evil of these people!'

Note: The negatives numquam 'never' and nihil 'not at all' may also occur in these three kinds of negative command.

154. Indirect Statements (3): Subject Accusative and Present Infinitive

An indirect statement may take the form of a quod (quia, quoniam) clause with either the indicative or the subjunctive (see Sections 43 and 135), or it may be cast into the subject accusative and infinitive construction. The introductory verb in either construction is a verb of saying, knowing, or thinking.

When the time of the indirect statement is simultaneous with that of the main verb, the present infinitive is used. The subject accusative is always expressed: if the direct statement does not have an expressed subject, a pronoun is supplied in the accusative- if the subjects of the main verb and of the quoted statement are the same, a reflexive pronoun in the accusative is supplied.

SIMULTANEOUS TIME IN THE PRESENT:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicat. 'Jesus is preaching in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	:	Olcunt Jesum in synagoga praedicat. 'They say that Jesus is preaching in the synagogue.'

SIMULTANEOUS TIME IN THE PAST:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicat. 'Jesus is preaching in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	:	Dicebant Jesum in synagoga praedicare. 'They were saying that Jesus was preaching in the synagogue.'

SIMULTANEOUS TIME IN THE FUTURE:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicat. 'Jesus is preaching in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	:	Dicent Jesum in synagoga praedicare. 'They will say that Jesus is preaching in the synagogue.'

Note that, in a future construction, English idiom also uses the present tense to express simultaneity: 'will say. . is preaching.'

direct	statement	,	In synagoga praedicat.
no expressed subject	:		'He preaches in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	,	Dicunt eum in synagoga praedicare.

Vocabulary Notes

Cogito may take an accusative ('plan something') or de + ablative ('think about something').

Nego means 'deny.' When used to introduce an indirect statement, it translates a negative in the quoted statement: nego Petrum esse hie 'I say that Peter is not here' [original statement: 'Peter is not here'].

Persevere takes in + ablative: perseverat in fide 'he continues in the faith.' In imitation of the Greek idiom, it may take a present supplementary participle (agreeing with the subject): perseverat drans 'he continues praying.'

Socio, the denominative of socius (Unit 9), takes an accusative + a dative or ablative: 'share something with someone,' or 'ally something to something.' Personal nouns in this construction go into the accusative: Petrus domo nos sociavit 'Peter shared his home with us.'

Veto takes either indirect command construction—ut + subjunctive or accusative + infinitive (see Section 120). The latter is the accusative of the person forbidden and the infinitive of the action forbidden: veto te exire 'I forbid you to leave.'

Somnus 'sleep' means 'dream' in the plural.

Lignum means 'tree' [Rev. xxii, 2] or '(piece of) wood' (and so a 'club' [Mk. xiv, 43, 48]).

Nemo < ne + homo 'no man.' The genitive and ablative forms neminis and nemine are usually supplanted by the equivalent forms of nullus (Unit 28).

The imperative forms noli and ndlite come from a verb which is seldom used in ecclesiastical Latin: nolo, nolle, ndlui, — 'be unwilling, wish not': nolo < ne + volo.

Quisquam is an indefinite pronoun, declined like quis, quid (see Section 140), except that the feminine nominative has its own form: quaequam (not quisquam). There are no plural forms. It is used with negatives. For example, nee quisquam (which always replaces et nemo).

Cogito, existimd, nego, puto, and any similar verbs of saying, thinking, or knowing may take the newly presented indirect statement construction, the subject accusative + infinitive. Formal English requires the subordinating conjunction 'that' to introduce this construction, even though there is no expressed equivalent in the Latin. Putas may be used parenthetically to signal a question.

Unit 31

155. Perfect Infinitives: Active and Passive

The perfect active infinitive is formed by adding -isse to the base of the third principal part.

laudavi: laudav- + -isse = laudavisse

monui: monu- + -isse = monuisse

dux!: dux- + -isse = duxisse

cepi: cep- + -isse = cepisse audivi: audiv- + -isse = audivisse

fui: fu- + -isse = fuisse

potui: potu- + -isse = potuisse volui: volu- + -isse = voluisse

i!/ivf: i- + -isse = isse

iv- + -isse = fuisse

The perfect passive infinitive is a two-word compound; it is formed by using esse (the present infinitive of sum) with the fourth principal part.

laudatus, -a, -um esse

monitus, -a, -um esse

ductus, -a, -um esse

captus, -a, -um esse

auditus, -a, -um esse

156. Indirect Statement (4): Subject Accusative and Perfect Infinitive

The perfect infinitive is used in the subject accusative and infinitive construction when the time of the indirect statement is prior to that of the main verb. Therefore, the translation of the perfect infinitive will vary according to the time of the main verb.

PRIOR TIME IN THE PRESENT:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicavit. 'Jesus preached in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	:	Oicunt Jesum in synagoga praedicavrsse. 'They say that Jesus preached in the synagogue.'

PRIOR TIME IN THE PAST:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicavit. 'Jesus preached in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	:	Dixerunt Jesum in synagoga praedicavrsse. 'They said that Jesus had preached in the synagogue.'
direct	statement	:	Jesus traditus est. 'Jesus was betrayed.'
indirect	statement	:	Dixerunt Jesum traditum esse. 'They said that Jesus had been betrayed .'

Note: As with other forms of sum, esse in the perfect passive infinitive may be omitted.

PRIOR TIME IN THE FUTURE:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicavit. 'Jesus preached in the synagogue.'
indirect	statement	:	Dicent Jesum in synagoga praedicavrsse. 'They will say that Jesus preached in the synagogue.'

Note: This last may be translated 'that Jesus will have preached/ since the perfect infinitive indicates prior time either to a future or to a present.

157. Predicate Genitive

The genitive case may be used as a predicate as well as an attributive. This construction indicates a trait or an action which is characteristic of a certain type of person: a present infinitive or a noun is linked to the genitive by a form of sum.

Diligere et Deum et vicinum est boni Christiani.

['To love both God and neighbor is of a good Christian.'] 'Loving both God and neighbor is characteristic of a good Christian.'

Petrus erat magnae fidei.

'Peter was (a man) of great faith.'

Joannes erat episcopalis ordinis.

'John was of {belonged to} the episcopal rank.'

158. Conditional Relative Clauses

A relative pronoun or adverb may be used in any conditional construction to express a general conditional idea. The relative word, which has no definite antecedent, replaces the introductory word si.

Quodcumque minimis feceris, mihi facies.

'Whatever you do for the least, you will be doing for me.'

Qui vicinum diligit, me diligit.

'He who loves his neighbor loves me.'

Quodcumque ieris, sequar.

'(To) wherever you go, I will follow.'

Quaeso and quaesumus are used parenthetically: Dona, O Domine, quaesumus, etc. 'grant, O Lord, we beg, etc.' They preserve archaic spellings: quaeso > quaerd; quaesumus > quaerimus.

The deponent verb convector is the intransitive form of converts (equivalent to the Greek middle voice): convector 'I convert (myself).' Likewise, revertor is intransitive: 'I turn (myself) back, I return.'

Magus is a Persian word for a priest of the Zoroastrian religion.

laudaturus, -a, -um esse moniturus, -a, -um esse ducturus, -a, -um esse capturus, -a, -um esse auditurus, -a, -um esse

 2. As with other forms of sum, esse may be omitted.
 3. The future passive infinitive is quite rare, and so has been omitted from this text.

160. Indirect Statements (5): Subject Accusative and Future Infinitive

The future infinitive is used in the subject accusative and infinitive construction when the time of the indirect statement is subsequent to that of the main verb. The translation of the future infinitive will vary according to the time of the main verb.

SUBSEQUENT TIME IN THE PRESENT:

direct	statement	:	Jesus in synagoga praedicabit.
			'Jesus will preach in the synagogue.'

indirect	statement	:	Dicunt Jesum in synagoga praedicaturum esse. 'They say that Jesus will preach in the synagogue.'

indirect	statement	:	Olcent Jesum in synagoga praedicaturum esse. 'They will say that Jesus will preach in the synagogue.'

161. Indirect Reflexives

A reflexive pronoun used in a subordinate construction may sometimes refer, not to the subject of its own clause, but to that of the main clause. Context will make such cases clear.

direct	reflexive	:	Aliqui viri sibi cibum habuerunt. 'Some men had food for themselves.'
indirect	reflexive	:	Puu/us subito audlvit virurn loquentern sibi. 'Paul suddenly heard a man speaking to him .'

164. Ablative of Time When or Time within Which

The ablative case of a word denoting a measurement of time, with or without the preposition in, may be used to indicate the time when something occurs or the period within which it occurs.

(In) illo tempore Jesus in Galilaea praedicabat.

'In that time/ at that time/ within that period of time Jesus was preaching in Galilee.'

Note: The extended use of the ablative of time within which leads to the ablative of duration of time (see Section 166).

165. Accusative of Extent of Time or Space

The accusative case of a word denoting measurement of time or space may be used to indicate extent of time or space.

Paulus mansit ibi dies pauchs.

'Paul stayed there for a few days.'

166. Ablative of Duration of Time

The ablative case of a word denoting measurement of time may be used to indicate duration of time.

Quinque diebus* mulier fuerat infirma.

'The woman had been sick for five days.'

167. Summary of Conditional Clauses

Particular or general conditional clauses fall into three categories: simple, future, or contrafactual. Particular clauses are introduced by si, nisi, or si . . non; general clauses, by a relative pronoun or adverb (Section 158).

(a) Simple conditional clauses (Section 115a) take the present indicative or any past indicative tense. They express the idea of mere contingency; nothing else is implied.

Si abit, . . 'If he leaves, . . '

Si abibat, . . 'If he was leaving, . . '

Si abiit, . . 'If he left, . . '

Si abierat, . . 'If he had left, . . '

(b) Future conditional clauses (Section 115b) are of two kinds: more vivid and less vivid, depending on the firmness with which the contingency is viewed. The future more vivid conditional clause employs the future or future-perfect tense of the indicative.

Nisi vicinum tuum diligis/dilexeris, . .

'Unless you love your neighbor, . . '

The future less vivid conditional clause employs the present subjunctive.

Qudcumque ire veils,. .

'(To) wherever you should wish to go,.

Si eum roges,. .

'If you should ask him, .

(c) Contrafactual conditional clauses (Sections 128, 132) are of two kinds: present and past. The present contrafactual conditional clause employs the imperfect subjunctive.

Si hoc facerent,..

'If they were doing this, . . '

The past contrafactual conditional clause employs the pluperfect subjunctive.

Si hoc fecissent,. .

'If they had done this, . . '

Note: The ablative absolute construction or a participle alone may be used to express a conditional idea (Sections 65, 68, 87c).

Vocabulary Notes

As its third and fourth principal parts clearly reveal, cogo is a compound of ago (Unit 6). It may take an object accusative + infinitive or ut + subjunctive (the indirect command).

Pango (the root of which is PAG) shows three types of the third principal part: 1) panxi (PAG palatalized + -s- = PANGS- – PANX-), 2) peg! (PAG with vowel lengthened – PEG-), 3) pepigi (PAG reduplicated = PEPIG-).

Ero forms many compounds; others may be encountered, including afferre (ad + ferre), differre (dis- + ferre), sufferre (sub + ferre), circumferre, praeferre, superferre, and transferre.

Natio and nativitas are nouns formed from the perfect participle of nascor (Unit 20).

Inquam is a defective verb, used parenthetically after one or more words in its clause. It means 'I mean' as well as 'I say.' A third-person singular form—inquit—may also be found.

Unit 34

168. The Irregular Verb fid

Fid; fieri, —, factus sum 'be made, be done; become, happen, be' is remarkable in three ways:

1. in the present-stem system (excluding only the present infinitive), it has active forms, but passive meanings,
2. the present stem, ki-, retains the length of its vowel in all forms of the present subjunctive, and of the present, imperfect, and future indicatives,
- z. the present infinitive has the unique passive ending -eri. (Thus the infinitive is passive in form as well as in meaning.)

Like that of a deponent verb, the imperfect subjunctive is made from the hypothetical active infinitive fieri with final -e lengthened (fiere-), to which the active personal endings are added.

Fid serves as the passive present-stem system for facio, facere, feci, factus 'do, make' (Unit 6). Note that these verbs are identical in the perfect passive system.

Fid almost never forms compounds; facio, when compounded, may form all passive tenses, including those of the present-stem system. For example:

	ACTIVE	PASSIVE
Simple verb:	facio ('I make')	fid ('I am made')
Compound verb:	efficio ('I make')	efficior ('I am made')
INDICATIVES

fid ('I am made')	fiēbam ('I was made')	flam ('I will be made')
fis	fiēbas	fies
fit	fiēbat	fiet
fimus	fiēbamus	fiemus
fitis	fiēbatis	fietis
fiunt	fiēbant	fient

Note: The stem vowel, by rule, shortens before -t.

169, Some Cardinal and Ordinal Numerals

The cardinal numerals one, two, and three are declined; most others are not. All ordinal numerals are declined.

The number one—unus, -a, -um—has already been presented (Units 7 and 28). The number two is thus declined:

M.	F.	N.
duo	duae	duo
duorum	duarum	dudrum
duobus	duabus	duobus
duds, duo	duas	duo
duobus	duabus	duobus

The number three is thus declined:

m./f.	N.
tres	tria
trium	trium
tribus	tribus
tres	tria
tribus	tribus

Cardinal and ordinal numerals are adjectives: tres episcopi 'three bishops'; tertius episcopus 'the third bishop.' Although the partitive idea with cardinal numerals may occasionally be conveyed by the partitive genitive, most often it is expressed through the use of de or ex + the ablative: tres de (ex) episcopis 'three of the bishops.'

170. Impersonal Verbs

Impersonal verbs occur in the third-person singular only. Either no subject is immediately in mind or a clause or infinitive is the grammatical subject. In either case, the English expletive it is used in the translation. Some otherwise personal verbs may be used impersonally.

The following have a clause or an infinitive as subject:

auditur 'it is heard'

convenit 'it is fitting'

dicitur 'it is said'

licet 'it is permitted'

placet 'it is pleasing' videtur 'it seems good'

oportet 'it is proper'

necesse est 'it is necessary'

Note: These present-tense forms are merely illustrative; all other tenses may also occur.

The following are impersonal passive forms which focus on the action itself and not on the agent:

cenatum est

'it was dined' – 'there was dining,' 'people dined' ventum est

'it was come' – 'there was coming,' 'people came'

Note: The perfect is here illustrated; other tenses may occur.

A curious survival of Hebraic idiom is factum est 'it happened (that),' 'it came to pass (that).' An introductory expression, it does not ordinarily affect the grammatical structure of what follows.

Factum est autem cum haec diceret., .

'And it happened that when he was saying these things, . . '

171. Summary of Uses of the Genitive Case

Although the genitive case is most often used to limit a noun, it may also depend on an adjective or a verb. Several uses of the genitive are distinguishable:

- (a) Genitive of Possession (Section 10)

Libri puerdrum.

'The books of the children.' 'The children's books.'

- (b) Genitive of Description (Section 73)

Homines bonae voluntatis.

'Persons of good will.'

- (c) Subjective and Objective Genitive (Section 75)

Dei dilectid hominum.

'God's love of human beings.'

- (d) Partitive (Section 81)

Satis cibi.

'Enough (of) food.'

Pars civitatis.

'Part of the city.'

- (e) Predicate Genitive (Section 157)

Vir est sanae mentis.

'The man is of sound mind.'

- (f) Genitive after Certain Adjectives

Memor Petri.

'Mindful of Peter.'

Potens daemoniorum.

'Having power over evil spirits.'

- (g) Genitive after Certain Verbs

Misereor tui.

'I pity you.'

- (h) Miscellaneous Uses

The genitive is used with causa (Unit 9), and after comparatives and superlatives (Section 142b). In imitation of a Hebraic idiom, a noun in the genitive case may follow a different case of itself (e.g., in saecula saeculorum 'forever and ever').

172. Summary of Uses of the Dative Case

In general, the dative case is used to denote the person interested in or affected by the verbal action. Several uses may be distinguished:

- (a) Dative of the Possessor (Section 14)

Quid est tibi nomen?

'What is your name?' 'What name do you have?'

- (b) Dative of Indirect Object (Section 26)

Petrus mihi hoc dedit.

'Peter gave me this.' 'Peter gave this to me.'

- (c) Dative of Reference: Advantage or Disadvantage (Section 76)

Jesus eis peccata dimisit.

'Jesus forgave them their sins.'

Deo et hominibus peccavit.

'He has sinned against God and men.'

- (d) Dative of Personal Agency with Passive Periphrastics (Section 99)

Hymnus nobis cantandus est.

'A hymn ought to be sung by us.' 'We ought to sing a hymn.'

- (e) Dative of Purpose (Section 150)

Eritis odid eis.

'You will be for the purpose of a hatred with reference to them.'

'They will hate you.'

Eis is the dative of reference in the double dative construction (Section 150).

- (f) Dative with Certain Adjectives (Section 82)

Filius Patri similis est.

'The Son is like the Father.'

- (g) Dative with Certain Verbs

1. Intransitive verbs:

Credunt Evangelic.

'They believe in the Gospel.'

2. Impersonal verbs:

Non licet tibi abire.

'It is not permitted for you to leave.'

3. Compounds (especially of sum):

Quid mihi prodest?

'What does it profit me?'

Modis antiquis inhaerebant.

'They were clinging to their ancient ways.'

Vocabulary Notes

Although the verbs 'harm, please, obey, and serve' in English are transitive and take a direct object, neced, placed, complaced, oboedio, and servid are intransitive and take the dative. In the passive, these verbs are used impersonally and the dative is retained: regi servimus 'we serve the king'; regi a nobis servitur ['it is served the king by us'] 'the king is served by us.'

The compound complaced uses perfect active or passive forms with no difference in meaning: complacui/complacitus sum 'I pleased.' The same is true of licet: licuit/licitum est 'it was permitted.'

Humilitas and sanctitas are the abstract nouns formed from humilis (Unit 29) and sanctus (Unit 5).

Occasus and ortus are fourth declension nouns formed from the last principal part of occido and orior (Unit 20).

Besides the infinitive construction, licet and necesse est may take an ut or quod clause.

Unit 35

173. Greek Periphrastic Tenses

In imitation of Greek, the Latin of the Vulgate sometimes uses a present participle with sum to form periphrastic tenses equivalent to the English progressive. Since the participle modifies the subject, only the nominative is used. The most common tenses are the present, the imperfect, and the future.

a. Present The present Greek periphrastic is compounded of the present participle and the present tense of sum.

laudans sum	laudantes sumus
('I am praising')	('we are praising')
etc.	etc.

b. Imperfect The imperfect Greek periphrastic is compounded of the present participle and the imperfect tense of sum.

laudans eram	laudantes eramus
('I was praising')	('we were praising')
etc.	etc.

c. Future The future Greek periphrastic is compounded of the present participle and the future tense of sum.

laudans erd	laudantes erimus
('I will be praising')	('we will be praising')
etc.	etc.

174. Syncopated and Shortened Perfect-Active System Forms

Forms of the perfect, pluperfect, and future-perfect active, and the perfect active infinitive may undergo syncopation, i.e., the loss of a medial syllable, when the sequence -vi- or -ve- occurs. For example:

laudavisti > laudasti laudavistis > laudastis laudavissemus > laudassemus laudavisse > laudasse
 etc.

Ed and fourth conjugation verbs whose perfect-active stems end in -iv- have collateral forms which end in -i-: audivi (audii); custodivi (custodii); iv! (ii).

- Notes:*
1. The third plural of the perfect indicative active has an alternate ending used in poetry or highly colored prose: -ere (< -erunt).
 2. Occasionally, other parts of speech may lose a medial syllable: a dextris 'on the right' (for a dexteris); vinclum 'bond' (for vinculum).

175. Historical Present

As in English, lively narrative may use the present tense to represent a past tense. A subjunctive in a subordinate clause depending on a historical present takes a secondary tense (see Section 117).

Et educunt ilium ut crucifigerent eum. Mk. xv, 20.

'And they lead (led) him out in order that they might crucify him.'

176. Cognate Ablative

The verbal idea of a sentence may be reinforced by the ablative case of a noun which denotes the same action as that of the verb. Often the verb and the noun are etymologically related. The cognate ablative is a special form of either the ablative of means (Section 34) or of the ablative of manner (Section 35).

Gavisi sunt magno gaudid.

'They rejoiced with a great joy.'

'They were exceedingly joyful.'

Clamavit magna voce.

'He shouted with a great voice.'

'He shouted very loudly.'

177. Summary of Uses of the Accusative Case

The accusative case is used to express 1) various forms of the direct object, 2) motion toward or duration of time (with or without a preposition), 3) an adverbial idea.

1. FORMS OF DIRECT OBJECT(a) Direct Object (Section 25)*Petrum vidit Paulus.

'Paul saw Peter.'

(b) Predicate Accusative (Section 83)Fecerunt eum papam

'They made him pope.'

(c) Cognate Accusative (Section 84)Vitas nostras vivimus.

'We live our own lives.'

(d) Double Accusative (Section 105)Nos Orationem docuit.

'He taught us the prayer.'

(e) Subject Accusative and Infinitive (Sections 154, 156, 160)

The subject accusative and infinitive is a form of double object.

Putaverunt Paulum esse deum.

'They thought that Paul was a god.'

(f) Anticipatory Accusative (Section 43113)Dicimus Petrum quod hic est bonus.

['We say Peter that he is good.']

'We say that Peter is good.'

2. SPACE AND TIME (SECTIONS 92 AND 165)(a) In domum intravit.

'He entered the house.'

Romam iit.

'He went to Rome.'

(b) Quinque dies mansit.

'He stayed for five days.'

z. ADVERBIAL ACCUSATIVE (SECTION 141)

Quid ploras?

['As to what are you weeping?']

'Why are you weeping?'

178. Summary of Uses of the Ablative Case

The ablative case is used to express a great variety of adverbial ideas.

- (a) Ablative of Accompaniment (Section 4c)

Cum Petro venit.

'He came with Peter.'

- (b) Ablative of Separation (Section 27)

Libera nos (a) maid.

'Deliver us from evil.'

- (c) Ablative of Means (Section 34)

Gladid occisus est.

'He was killed with a sword.'

- (d) Ablative of Manner (Section 35)

Magno (cum) dolore locutus est.

'He spoke with great sorrow.'

Vocabulary Notes

The verb —, —, coepe, coeptus 'began, started' has no present system; this lack is made up for by the use of the present system of incipib (Unit 12). Coepe + infinitive is a common Greek periphrasis for an imperfect: coepit discere 'he began to learn' – 'he was in the process of learning,' 'he was learning.'

The verb —, —, odi, — 'hate' is a perfect used as a present. The Vulgate also has bdib, bdire, odi, bsus. The passive is conveyed by the idiom odib esse 'to be for the purpose of a hatred,' i.e., 'to be hated.'

Baptismus and domus are heteroclites, i.e., nouns which use the endings of two declensions. Cf. baptisma, baptismatis, n. (Unit 6) and domus, domf, f. (Unit 6).

2. The Exsultet (Ambrose, d. 397)

Sabbato Sancto: Praeconium Paschale

Exsultet jam angelica turba caelorum: exsultent divina mysteria: et pro tanti Regis victoria tuba insonet salutaris. Gaudeat et tellus tantis irradiata fulgoribus: et aeterni Regis splendore illustrata, totius orbis se sentiat amisisse caliginem. Laetetur et mater Ecclesia, tanti luminis adornata fulgoribus: et magnis populorum vocibus haec aula resultet. Quapropter astantes vos, fratres carissimi, ad tarn miram hujus sancti luminis claritatem, una mecum, quaeso, Dei omnipotentis misericordiam invocate. Ut, qui me non meis mentis intra Levitarum numerum dignatus est aggregare: luminis sui claritatem infundens, cerei hujus laudem implere perficiat.

y. Dominus vobiscum.

R. Et cum spiritu tuo.

y. Sursum corda.

R. Habemus ad Dominum.

y. Gratias agamus Domino Deo nostro.

R. Dignum et justum est.

Vere dignum et justum est, invisibilem Deum Patrem omnipotentem Filiumque ejus unigenitum, Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, toto cordis ac mentis affectu et vocis ministerio personare. Qui pro nobis aeterno Patri Adae debitum solvit: et veteris piaculi cautionem pio cruore deterisit. Haec sunt enim festa paschalia, in quibus verus ille Agnus occiditur, cujus sanguine postes fidelium consecrantur. Haec nox est, in qua primum patres nostros, filios Israel eductos de Aegypto, Mare Rubrum sicco vestigio transire fecisti. Haec igitur nox est, quae peccatorum tenebras columnae illuminatione purgavit. Haec nox est, quae hodie per universum mundum in Christo credentes, a vitiis saeculi et caligine peccatorum segregates, reddit gratiae, sociat sanctitati. Haec nox est, in qua, destructis vinculis mortis, Christus ab inferis victor ascendit. Nihil enim nobis nasci profuit, nisi redimi profuisset. O mira circa nos tuae pietatis dignatio! O inaestimabilis dilectio caritatis: ut servum redimeres, Filium tradidisti! O certe necessarium Adae peccatum, quod Christi morte deletum est. O felix culpa, quae talem ac tantum meruit habere Redemptorem! O vere beata nox, quae sola meruit scire tempus et horam, in qua Christus ab inferis resurrexit! Haec nox est, de qua scriptum est: Et nox sicut dies illuminabitur: Et nox illuminatio mea in deliciis meis. Hujus igitur sanctificatio noctis fugat scelera, culpas lavat: et reddit innocentiam lapsis et maestis laetitiam. Fugat odia, concordiam parat et curvat imperia. In hujus igitur noctis gratia, suscipe, sancte Pater, incensi hujus sacrificium vespertinum: quod tibi in hac Cerei oblatione sollemni, per ministrorum manus de operibus apum, sacrosancta reddit Ecclesia. Sed jam columnae hujus praeconia novimus, quam in honorem Dei rutilans ignis accendit. Qui licet sit divisus in partes, mutuati tamen luminis detrimenta non novit. Alitur enim liquantibus ceris, quas in substantiam pretiosae hujus lampadis apis mater eduxit.

O vere beata nox, quae exspoliavit Aegyptios, ditavit Hebraeos! Nox, in qua terrenis caelestia, humanis divina junguntur. Oramus ergo te, Domine: ut Cereus iste in honorem tui nominis consecratus, ad noctis hujus caliginem destruendam, indeficiens perseveret. Et in odorem suavitatis acceptus, supernis luminaribus misceatur. Flammam ejus lucifer matutinus inveniatur. Ille, inquam, lucifer qui nescit occasum. Ille, qui regressus ab inferis, humano generi serenus illuxit. Precamur ergo te, Domine: ut nos famulos tuos, omnemque clerum, et devotissimum populum: una cum beatissimo Papa nostro et Antistite nostro, quiete temporum concessa, in his paschalibus gaudiis, assidua protectione regere, gubernare et conservare digneris. Respice etiam ad devotissimum Imperatorem nostrum, cujus tu, Deus, desiderii vota praenoscens, ineffabili pietatis et misericordiae tuae munere, tranquillum perpetuae pacis accommoda: et caelestem victoriam cum omni populo suo.

Per eundem Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, Filium tuum: qui tecum vivit et regnat in unitate Spiritus Sancti, Deus: per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

Ait autem ad illum angelus: "Ne timeas, Zacharia, quoniam exaudita est deprecatio tua, et uxor tua Elisabeth pariet tibi filium, et vocabis nomen ejus Joannem. Metrical Notes

The metrical patterns found in the verse readings are either quantitative or accentual. In a quantitative measure length of syllable is counted: vowels are long or short (by nature or by position). Long vowels and diphthongs are long; short vowels followed by two or more consonants are long by position; short vowels followed by a mute and a liquid consonant are short or long, depending on the demand of the meter. In an accentual meter the loud or soft stress on a syllable is counted, and the quantity is ignored—as it is in English verse. In quantitative measures two iambs or two trochees count as one metrum; in accentual measures two iambs or two trochees count as two metra. For example, in the quantitative line of an Ambrosian hymn, there are eight syllables, four iambs, two metra: hence, iambic dimeter; in the accentual line of the Verbum Supernum, there are eight syllables, four iambs, four metra: hence, iambic tetrameter. In quantitative measures, a final vowel is elided before an initial vowel: g., petraEcclesiae; thus it is not counted in the meter. A line may be either catalectic—missing a beginning or ending short or unaccented syllable—or acatalectic, i.e., complete.

5) Stabat Mater: accentual.

Six-line stanzas:

trochaic tetrameter acatalectic (lines 1, 2, 4, 5): /[^]∨[^]∨[^]∨[^]

trochaic tetrameter catalectic (lines 3, 6): /[^]/[^]/[^]/[^]/_a

Rime scheme: AABCCB, with occasional internal rime.

6) The Cockcrow Hymn: quantitative.

iambic dimeter: x-[^]-(x-[^]x

Aeterne r[^]rum Conditor

Note: Syllables 1, 5, and 8 may be either long or short; syllables 3 and 7 must always be short; syllables 2, 4, and 6 must always be long.

8) Vexilla Regis: quantitative.

Iambic dimeter. See 6).

Note the scansion of dicendo (line n) and cujus (line 17); see vocabulary note on major (Unit 22). Pretium (line 18) is scanned as two syllables: -i- here counts as a consonant (pret/um).

9) Pange Lingua [Fortunatus]: quantitative.

Each z-line stanza is in reality a 6-line stanza: each line is composed of a trochaic dimeter acatalectic ($-\hat{-x} | -\hat{-x}$) and a trochaic dimeter catalectic ($-\hat{-x} | -\hat{-x}_a$). Quando (lines 5 and 10) is scanned quadd; the -o may count as either long or short. The final long o of ordo (line 7), ergo (line 10), and virgo (line 14) is artificially shortened: ordo, ergo, virgo; this is a common metrical liberty. The -i- in unius (line 33) is common in quantity: -I-.

10) Veni Creator Spiritus: quantitative.

Iambic dimeter. See 6).

Line 10 begins with a rare anapestic substitution: digitus paternae.

11) Ave Maris Stella: accentual.

Trochaic trimeter:

Occasionally, accentual poems make use of elision, as in line 13: te_esse.

12) Gloria Laus: quantitative.

Elegiac couplet:

I—|x

The quantities of names and foreign words often vary: e.g., Israel is here scanned Israel. Final o of devotio is artificially shortened: devotio. Final -i of tibi may count as long or short.

13) Veni Sancte Spiritus: accentual.

Trochaic tetrameter catalectic: $/\wedge | /\wedge | /\wedge /_a$

All ten stanzas end with the same rime.

14) Dies Irae: accentual.

Trochaic tetrameter: $/\wedge \vee \wedge \vee \wedge \vee$

Each stanza is triply rimed (except the last three shorter stanzas, which are later additions).

15) Lauda Sion: accentual.

Trochaic tetrameter acatalectic and catalectic. See 5).

The first nine stanzas have the same metrical and rime pattern as that of the Stabat Mater. Stanzas 10 and 11 add two more lines—stanza 12 adds four more lines, all acatalectic. Note the final rime scheme: AAAABCCCCB.

16) Pange Lingua [Aquinas]: accentual.

The metrical pattern copies accentually the quantitative pattern of Fortunatus's Pange Lingua. See 9). But Aquinas's poem rimes, as accentual poems most often do.

17) Verbum Supernum: accentual.

An accentual version of the Ambrosian quantitative measure.

See 6). Rime has been added to the form: ABAB.

18) Creator Alme Siderum: quantitative.

iambic dimeter. See 6).

19) A Solis Ortus: quantitative.

iambic dimeter. See 6).
